STEPHANOPOLOUS: How do you defend that gas tax holiday? I asked Sen. Clinton last week if she could name a credible economist that supported it and she couldn't. Can you?

FIORINA: No. But you see, I don't think it matters. I'm a business person . . .I think economists sometimes argue about the theory. Economists right now are arguing theoretically about whether we're in a recession or not. An American family who's sitting around the kitchen table, wondering about how they're going to pay for groceries, how they're going to fill their gas tank, whether or not they're going to stay in their home . . . for them, the economy is in difficulty and all the theoretical discussion is sort of irrelevant.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

STEPHANOPOLOUS: What's not theory is that this is going to cost $9 billion, the money's going to come out of the highway trust fund, that could cost up to 300,000 jobs.

FIORINA: Well, if it continued, yes, but let's talk about how much earmarks that John McCain has said we need to stop . . .

STEPHANOPOLOUS: He's using that for the tax cuts.

FIORINA: Well, that's $42 billion in the last two years . . . another clear difference between President Bush and John McCain, who believes that to get out of a difficult economic time we have to practice fiscal restraint, we have to grow our economy and we also have to find ways to reduce the increase in discretionary spending.

STEPHANOPOLOUS: You mentioned the difference on global warming. Sen. McCain indicated on Friday . . . that he's gonna support the Warner-Lieberman bill that would get a 70% reduction in carbon emissions by 2050. This would be a big break from the President . . . in fact, the White House . . . came out very hard against this bill just a few weeks ago . . .higher gas prices, recession, higher gas prices across the board. That's the White House line.

FIORINA: This is an area, and you and I both agree, where John McCain differs pretty substantially from the administration. But I think what John McCain has always said . . . is that the United States must take a leadership role in addressing climate change and global warming. that we must apply some of the discipline of the private marketplace to spur innovation in this area as well as to incent companies to to better.

STEPHANOPOLOUS: Even if it means higher gas prices . . . ?

FIORINA: I think we can debate that. There's no question that Sen. McCain has said over and over again that we have to incent innovation so that we are building these new green technologies. We have incent innovation around things like clean coal. And by the way, we also have to incent around nuclear power. Which is clean, which is abundant. Yes there are issues. But if we would step up and adopt nuclear power in this country, that's potentially many millions of jobs.

STEPHANOPOLOUS: . . . other Republicans argue that the cap and trade proposal supported by the Democrats is a tax increase, you say that's wrong?

FIORINA: . . . the cap and trade proposal is trying to do is to provide the incentives of a private market places, to encourage people to innovate . . .to find new ways of reducing their greenhouse emissions. I'm a business person, I know that incentives and competition in the private marketplace work . . . John McCain believes there is most definitely a role for government he also knows that there is a role for the private marketplace . . .

STEPHANOPOLOUS: George Will suggested in Newsweek . . . that this cap and trade proposal is an energy rationing proposal. . .

FIORINA: . . . what it does do is encourage people to find alternatives. I think we can't simply say that we need people to reduce greenhouse gas emissions . . .

STEPHANOPOLOUS: . . . Democrats are signaling that they're going to use your background . . . as an issue . . . one issue they cite, especially, is offshoring of US jobs. And Sen. Obama . . . said he wants to take away the tax break for companies that keep their profits overseas. Why should there be a tax break . . .?

FIORINA: . . . the United States today has the second highest tax rate in the world . . . and that encourages people to put jobs and factories overseas . . . Ireland used to be the slowest growing economy in Western Europe, it's now one of the fastest . . . they reduced their tax rate . . . and that encouraged businesses . . . we have to address the tax rate on businesses . . .

STEPHANOPOLOUS: And Sen. McCain has come out for cutting the corporate tax rate, yet he still wants to preserve the tax break for keeping profits overseas . . .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

FIORINA: . . . Sen. McCain understands that you must focus on why jobs are going overseas. And there are really two issues. One . . . is the tax rate . . . and the other is education and worker retraining. Another area where John McCain differs from President Bush. He said a year ago . . . let's make sure that when workers lose their jobs because of globalization . . . that we prepare them.

STEPHANOPOLOUS: . . . why is he for preserving the tax break for keeping profits overseas?

FIORINA: Well describe to me the tax break that Obama thinks is being maintained for companies who leave profits overseas. There is not an incentive today, I can tell you as a CEO, you don't get a tax break for leaving profit overseas. What you get--

STEPHANOPOLOUS: You can defer the profits on those taxes for as long as they stay overseas. And that's what he wants to take away.

FIORINA: . . . If the tax rate were lowered . . . businesses would bring money back. The reason they cannot bring money back is because the tax rate is so onerous.

STEPHANOPOLOUS: Not if they can pay no taxes for leaving them overseas. . .

FIORINA: The way it works today is that if you choose to bring cash back into this country you have to pay at a tax rate that is the second highest in the world. Countries around the world are incenting businesses to place jobs and factories in their country . . . by giving a lower tax rate . . .

STEPHANOPOLOUS: The Obama campaign is signaling . . . the issue . . . they're going to use is abortion. And they point to the GOP platform on abortion, which is a constitutional amendment with no exceptions . . . for rape, incest, life of the mother. Sen. McCain used to be for changing the platform . . . now he's signaling that it should stand as it is. Aren't you worried that's going to turn off independents and moderate Republicans . . .

FIORINA: . . . John has been consistently pro-life. He also, as you perhaps know, said he supports stem-cell research . . . I can tell you right now that John McCain is not yet . . . focused on the platform. He's focused on getting his message to the American people . . .

STEPHANOPOLOUS: But he's been pretty consistent since 2000 on pushing for a change in that platform, and now he's signaling that he's no longer going to push for that change . . .

FIORINA: I don't think he's made any signal at this point . . .

STEPHANOPOLOUS: . . . Cindy McCain . . . has refused to release her tax returns. In 2004 your predecessors in the Republican party called on Theresa Heinz-Kerry to release her tax returns. Eventually she did release her form 1040 . . . why shouldn't Sen. McCain's wife do the same thing?

FIORINA: Well, Cindy McCain has made her position very clear here and I support it . . .

STEPHANOPOLOUS: . . . don't you see an inconsistency between the Republican position in 2004 and the Republican position now?

FIORINA: Well, I wasn't part of the RNC in 2004 . . .

Highlight #3

McCain Adviser, Pfotenhauer, Praises McCain on Environment, Defends McCain's GI Bill Stance
(FNC 05/12/08 5:07pm)

BILL HEMMER: First on Fox tonight, John McCain making the environment his top priority this week, pledging to fight global warming while Democrats charge it's only an attempt to snag independent Democratic voters. Sen. McCain airs a new ad on the environment in Oregon. Listen here. [ad plays] . . . now tonight, Senior Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Adviser, Nancy Pfotenhauer is back with us . . .a Republican who believes in the impact of climate change. Some might think the world is spinning on a different axis . . .

NANCY PFOTENHAUER: Sen. McCain is somebody who always--he's a straight talker . . . when he identifies a problem he goes after it. And this is one he embraced about 2003, so he's been working on it for a long time . . . he thinks it's one of the biggest challenges facing this country . . . he's developed a market based approach to solving this problem that should lower emissions, spur innovation and keep our economy strong and vibrant.

HEMMER: Nancy, what does that do in terms of a political position for McCain in this campaign?

PFOTENHAUER: I think it identifies him as someone who will always put the national interest ahead of his self interest. I mean he is not checking any political boxes. He is just identifying the most important challenges that our country faces and he's going to go after them . . .

HEMMER: Nancy, I want to get to this back and forth between Obama and McCain . . about the GI Bill. Sen. Barack Obama, listen here . . . :

BARACK OBAMA: I have great respect for John McCain's service to this country . . . but John McCain is one of the few senators of either party who oppose this bill. Because he thinks it's too generous . . .

PFOTENHAUER: Talk about just flagrant political pandering. I mean, that so--that was diametrically opposed to the truth . . . Sen. McCain has his own legislation and by the way, he's largely supportive of the goals of the Webb bill. The problem is doesn't do enough, it doesn't do it quickly enough and it doesn't do enough to address re-enlistment and retention. In fact . . . the Congressional Budget Office has estimated that if the Webb bill goes through, we'd see a reduction in re-enlistment rates of 16%. The other thing that's critically different with Sen. McCain's legislation is that he supports transferability of education credits . . .

HEMMER: . . . from what I understand, the McCain proposal would take longer for servicemen and servicewomen to qualify for education subsidies . . .

PFOTENHAUER: . . . my understanding is that we are more generous up front but it's a graduted scale, so that the longer you stay in the military, the more you are compensated and that is absolutely essential for retention . . .

Highlight #4

Panel on Reliable Sources Analyzes Recent McCain Interviews; Questions Quality of McCain Press Treatment (CNN 05/11/08 10:36am)

HOWARD KURTZ: […] Now I praised O'Reilly's interview with Hillary Clinton. […] Was he anywhere near as tough on John McCain?

CLARENCE PAGE: It seems like John McCain's been getting something of a free pass here because he hasn't been in the spotlight compared to that big fight going on the democratic side. Those were good questions O'Reilly raised.

It is true, it's gonna start getting tougher on McCain; when I say it I mean the media as well as his opponent. Right now those questions are the questions he's ready to answer, you might say.

KURTZ: But O'Reilly used the interview to bash the media. [Impersonating O'Reilly] 'Look at all these awful things they're saying about you. The New York Times is digging up dirt on you.'

That didn't exactly put McCain on the spot.

AMANDA CARPENTER: I don't think the O'Reilly interview was completely a soft-ball. Sure they talked about some of the anti-McCain stories and there's been more than that; than just in The New York Times. The Washington Post just had a story trying to prove an illicit land deal. That was on their front page a few days ago that we talked about in Town Hall quite a bit, pointing out the errors in but O'Reilly—

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

KURTZ: You say 'trying to prove.' You don't believe that story was largely factual?

CARPENTER: Well, if you look at the headline of that story it said that 'McCain Backs Land Deal that Benefits Backer'—I may not have [the headline] 100% correct—but there's no connection made in that story that McCain knew that deal would actually benefit a person that donated to his campaign. Now I think that link needed to be proven in order to put that headline up.
Back to the O'Reilly interview: He did ask McCain some tough questions; mainly on immigration and sanctuary city policies, which McCain said [he is] opposed to and, which I thought was more interesting, his opposition to drilling in Anwar, which is a huge issue to conservatives and makes McCain look bad to the base.

[…]

CARPENTER: I don't think [John McCain's claim that Obama is the candidate of choice or Hamas is] a smear at all. I mean, I have been on a number of those calls with Senator McCain and what happens, I've noticed, within the media, and how it gets covered is that someone will ask him a question about William Ayers or Reverend Wright or, in this case, Hamas. McCain will respond to it.

He doesn't bring it up himself. He doesn't run an ad about it. Because he responds to the question, he gets accused of conducting a smear campaign against the candidate. So I think there's a difference.

KURTZ: […] the fact that a candidate says something in response to a blogger's question or a reporter's question doesn't let him off the hook for what he says.

CARPTENTER: […] he's trying to draw a distinction where, if someone asks him a question about it he's not going to evade it. He'll answer it clearly, succinctly. You know John McCain, this is what he does. He takes town hall questions. He doesn't evade these things, but he's not going to go out and give a speech about it.

He's not going to begin the call with attack points and talking points against—on a certain subject like that.

[…]
KURTZ: Was that interview [with Roberta McCain] sort of a Mosther's Day gift?

[…]

KURTZ: […] Do you believe the [Ariana Huffington] story [about how McCain didn't vote for Bush] and does it matter?

CARPTENTER: […] You know, I read The Huffington Post quite and she equally divides her time between saying that John McCain is a pawn of the vast right-wing conspiracy but now she's trying to sell her book on the fact that he wouldn't even vote for George Bush so I'm a little confused.

KURTZ: Other people at the dinner said the same thing.

PAGE: […] It is interesting, though, that McCain's critics do want to have it both ways; on whether he's an independent of Bush or whether he is a Bush lackey. […]

Road to the White House Panel Evaluates Whether McCain is a Media Darling (MSNBC 05/12/08 6:35pm)
[Clip starts with segment of speech in which Obama points to McCain's free pass from the press.]

RACHEL MADDOW: […] Barack Obama needs to contend with the fact that the press has been willing to be really harsh on him this primary campaign and the press does have a historical love affair with John McCain. That can't just be something you complain about—you have to have a strategy to combat it.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

DAVID GREGORY: [...] Yeah, John McCain has not got a lot of scrutiny right now because we've got a historic democratic race to contend with, but does that necessarily hold up as we go along?

JAY DEDAPPER: I would say that John McCain, if he's had a free pass, nobody's seen it. All the air has been sucked out of the room by the democrats and, if anything, John McCain hasn't gotten much attention […]

PAT BUCHANAN: I'm not sure what [McCain's global warming speech] buys him on the left, but I do know it buys him a lot of suspicion and mockery on the right-wing of the republican party. […]

Moyers on the McCain Camp: 'They're Working the Refs' (MSNBC 05/12/08 8:37pm)
KEITH OLBERMANN: Is the McCain camp, do you think, with your experience on both sides of this ball, are they setting a base line? Are they working the refs before the game starts?

BILL MOYERS: They're working the refs. You do that to put the other side on the defensive, put the press on the defensive, make them come around, you also do it because it's still popular in this country to harangue the press. You can get people on your side just by coming out against the force in America that everybody finds some reason to dislike.

McCain Adviser, Donatelli, Complains of Media Bias, Says More 527 Attacks Come from Democratic Side (FNC 05/12/08 4:45pm)
NEIL CAVUTO: Hitting newsstands, Newsweek's cover story, turning it's focus to the expected battle between John McCain and Barack Obama . . . the article is saying that Obama's campaign is bracing for low blows from McCain's corner. With us now is McCain adviser, deputy chairman of the RNC, Frank Donatelli . . .not happy with this piece I guess, huh Frank?

FRANK DONATELLI: Well, you now Neil, I knew there were a lot of people in the liberal media that wanted Barack Obama to be president. I didn't know there were some that wanted canonize him also. If you read the piece from start to finish it could not have been written any better from the Obama perspective, saying that it's the Republicans that scare people, that poor Sen. Obama had to endure the attacks of 527s . . . when in reality the 527s are heavily targeted to the Democratic side. And, most of the criticisms . . . will be issue based. Sen. McCain has said that again and again.

CAVUTO: You know what's interesting in these attacks, and it's on both sides, no one in the media ever says, uh, the Republican forces should get ready for the nasty personal attacks, even though we know they're already coming on issues like age and competence . . . but at least in the presentation in the media, the inference is the nastiness will be entirely by Republicans. What'd you make of that?

DONATELLI: Well, I don't know other than I agree with exactly with what you're saying. The 527 attacks are overwhelmingly Democratic oriented, General Betray-Us, MoveOn.org, they're going to be spending a lot of money in opposition to Sen. McCain. The Democratic National Committee are running commercials that literally take statements McCain has said about the economy and about Iraq and eliminate sentences and splice words to make it look like McCain is saying something like he's not. And yet, for some reason, all of these things are not focused on. It's only the attacks on poor Sen. Obama that are.

CAVUTO: . . . obviously they'll quibble with that characterization, Frank. I think that in this new age though, Republican or Democrat, the emphasis is on responding very, very quickly. Is it going to be that kind of year? . . .when charges are levied, they're going to be responded to in a nanosecond?

DONATELLI: Well yes, and I think they should be and there's nothing wrong with that and I guess I would say one more time to assure everyone that as far as the campaign that Sen. McCain is going to run, it's going to be about the issues. There are enough things that separate Sen. Obama who's the most liberal member of the senate and Sen. McCain who's a center-right conservative, talk about how we fight the war on terror, whether or not more taxes are important, whether or not more spending is a good thing for our country. Those are the things I can tell everyone that Sen. McCain is going to campaign on.

CAVUTO: Is there an effort in the McCain camp to portray his age as an asset? . . .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

DONATELLI: I'd say he's the wisest of all the candidates running. And that comes from years of experience. Look, if you want real change, doesn't it make sense that a real agent of change actually knows something about the institution that he wants to change? Sen. McCain understands the congress, he understands executive power and he can make changes. . .

CAVUTO: . . . someone could turn that around and say, this guy's been in the senate forever and is the past.

DONATELLI: He's been in the senate, but it's a wisdom borne of understanding how to change the insitution . . .he's reached across party lines on a variety of issues . . .

Highlight #5
Obama's Campaign Reacts to McCain's Criticism of Webb's GI Bill (FNC 05/12/08 5:11pm)
FREDRICO PENA: . . . we're baffled as to why [John McCain's] opposed to [the GI Bill], it doesn't make any sense.

MEGYN KELLY: He says that the current GI Bill as proposed would encourage folks in the military to get out of the military. That's it's basically a disincentive to serve and he thinks that he wants a bill that looks like it but he wants more incentives built in. To make sure that our men and women in the military stay in the military. What's your response to that?

PENA: Well, I'm sure the sponsor, Senator Webb, would be flabbergasted to hear that. After all, he was a former Secretary of the Navy, he was a war hero, he is strongly supportive of veterans . . . so I'm sure everyone's very surprised to hear this new twist. that somehow a GI Bill to help veterans is somehow going to discourage people from joining the services. It's absolutely preposterous. But look, this is another example of how Sen. McCain has taken a position in the past, when he was a US Senator, and now that he's running for president he has a new twist, a new perspective and how he's presenting himself before . . . the wind turbine company when he's been voting against tax credits for the alternative energy industry.

KELLY: . . . before we get to energy I just want to make another point on the GI Bill because McCain responded today on Sen. Obama's position . . . I'd like to get your reaction. He says, "It is absurd for Barack Obama to question America's commitment to America's veterans when Obama himself voted against funding our nation's veterans troops in the field during a time of war." . . .

PENA: Nice distraction, but not on point. The questions is, what are we doing for veterans? That other bill had to do with appropriations . . . and that's a very different issue. We're talking about veterans. I'm sure that Senator Webb would also be very insulted to see his character challenged by Sen. McCain apparently insinuating that his bill doesn't take care of veterans. . .

Highlight #6
For Roy Blunt, a Third Bush Term is 'a Good Thing' (CNN 05/11/08 11:17am)
ROY BLUNT: […] I'm glad to see Mrs. Clinton stay in this race and keep that discussion going. I think that discussion, frankly, has been helpful for us. What McCain's gonna bring to the fall is somebody who really is arguably the candidate who can bring change to Washington. He's the one person from inside this town who nobody believes has ever been comfortable with the way things are goin' here.

WOLF BLITZER: Well you just heard Congressman Van Hollen say he represents a third Bush term. You know how unpopular his job approval numbers are right now.

BLUNT: I don't think anybody believes that. […] Everybody does believe from his record—here's somebody who's always been willing to complain about the way business was done in Washington and frankly people want to see those things change.

BLITZER: When it comes to domestic economic issues what's the major difference between President Bush's policies, what he wants to do and what John McCain would do if he were president?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BLUNT: Well, I think what John McCain wants to do is continue these pro-growth tax policies that our friends on the other side have been talking for 16 months—

BLITZER: But that's what President Bush wants to do.

BLUNT: And there's nothing wrong with that. There's nothing wrong with that.

BLITZER: So it would be an effective third Bush term when it comes to pro-growth tax policies.

BLUNT: It would be. I think it would be and I think that's a good thing. You can't go out in the country anywhere and find people who think doubling the capital gains rate is a good thing; that raising the highest rate on every small business in America's a good thing. That eliminating those bottom brackets that mean people at the lower levels of taxes pay less taxes than they would otherwise.

In fact, I think one of the reasons that the economy has slowed down the way it has is the fact that there's great uncertainty about how those tax policies move forward.

[...]

CHRIS VAN HOLLEN: The Bush economic policies have helped drive this economy into a ditch. The economy's lost [...] 260,000 jobs in the first four months and John McCain does represent a continuation of the Bush economic policies. Roy just acknowledged and the fact of the matters is people are hurting.

The one thing this president doesn't understand and John McCain doesn't understand is the economic squeeze families around the country are feeling. Now when it comes to Iraq, again this is a continuation of the Bush policies. So, on the two biggest issues on the agenda today, the war in Iraq and the economy, he represents a continuation of George Bush.

[...]

BLUNT: I think McCain will make the argument that he argued against policies that the defense department pursued, the Rumsfeld policies that have not produced the kind of results maybe that the Petraeus policies have. Americans clearly are tired of what they saw happening in Iraq, but they don't want to lose.

They don't want to leave there with a worse situation in the world than we'd have if we leave there with a stable Iraq. I think John McCain is going to be able to advance his position there in a way that the American people say, 'You know that's exactly the kind of result I want to see happen in Iraq.' [...]

MSNBC Panel Takes a Look at McCain's Problematic Ties, Bush and Parsley (MSNBC 05/12/08 4:50pm)
DAVID SCHUSTER: [McCain] made it clear he plans a very different approach [to global warming] than President Bush.

[...]

BONNIE ERBE: Senator McCain has sewn up the nomination for all intents and purposes so he's trying to go to the middle here. [...] This is the democrat's race to lose. They are seen as stronger on the economy and, of course, he has to run away from eight years of President Bush whose approval numbers are now down in the 20s.

He does that by saying, "I believe that global warming exists, that it is man-made and that we need to do something about it as opposed to the Bush approach, which is—'We don't know if it exists and, if it exists, we had nothing to do with it.'"

CHRIS CILLIZA: [...] he was in Oregon. Make no mistake, John McCain is trying to grow the map in ways that he thinks are helpful to him. [...] These are places where thinks that he may—a McCain republican as opposed to a

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bush republican, that's a very important distinction if you think John McCain has a chance in the fall—where a McCain republican would have a chance of winning. So he goes out to Oregon.

He makes a very prominent break with the mentality toward global warming on the part of the Bush Administration. […] if John McCain wants to have a chance in this election he cannot be painted as a third term for the Bush administration. I think where he goes and what he says when he gets there—especially when it relates to global warming is a key first step in trying to put some distance between himself and the current president.

[…]

CILLIZA: […] You could equate John McCain praising Ron Parsley and introducing him at an event—I think that's apples and oranges. […]

SCHUSTER: […] declaring war on Islam; that seems like the kind of thing that could hurt John McCain if he doesn't distance himself from it.

ERBE: Yes, but let's remember too here that he did not win Christian conservatives in his party in the primary season. Those votes went to Huckabee who is now out of the race, but he does need to win Christian conservatives who are threatening (some of them) to stay home in November and they would listen to this kind of rhetoric and actually be attracted by it many of them. Maybe not with the second comment, but certainly with his first comment.

Harry Reid Calls McSame on McCain (ABC 05/11/08 10:10am)
HARRY REID: . . . George Will . . . I think it was a couple days ago, he wrote a column saying that Republicans are going to have to develop a new type of campaign. They can't do what they've been doing all these years. They're not going to win the election on a gun issue. We are past that. We have an economy that's upside down. We have a war that's in its sixth year. The Republicans are in real trouble in the presidential race because they have a flawed candidate. Everybody knows about his temperment and we know that he's wrong on the war and wrong on the economy.

GEORGE STEPHANOPOLOUS: You also write in yoru book that in 2001 you counted John McCain as a potential crossover to join the democratic congress. Did you have any discussions with him about this . . .?

REID: . . . let me just say this: John McCain was a different John McCain in those days than he is now. Those are the days before he wrapped his arms around George Bush. In those days he did a few independent things. He didn't vote with them on the ridiculous things he's done on tax policies; put this country in red ink for the next generation or two or three. He didn't walk lock-step with a Karl Rove in the White House . . . he's a different person now than he was then and that's a dissapointment to a lot of us. . . I reached out for a lot of people . . .

STEPHANOPOLOUS: . . . you recently said . . . McCain is a flawed candidate, because among other things he has a temper . . . I had Sen. McCain on the program a few weeks ago and he said that these stories about his temper are either totally untrue or grossly exaggerated.

REID: [laughs] Well, I have said that, uh, John McCain is a flawed candidate . . . everybody knows that he has a real unusual temper . . . but I think the main thing is that he's wrong on the issues of America today. He's wrong on the war. He's wrong on the economy. He's a clone of George Bush.

Highlight #7
Lieberman on 'Our Enemies': They Need to Fear McCain (CNN 05/11/08 11:34am)
WOLF BLITZER: When you heard [Obama] use those words, 'losing his bearings,' did that impress you as an ageism or an attack on McCain's age?

JOSEPH LIEBERMAN: […] when I first heard it I thought it was an un-deserved and somewhat intemperate comment […] on the part of Senator Obama. […] To say he's lost his bearings suggests something more fundamental and personal.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[…]

LIEBERMAN: […] John McCain obviously knows and has said that Senator Obama clearly doesn't support any of the values or goals of Hamas but the fact that the spokesperson for Hamas would say they would welcome the election of Senator Obama really does raise the question, why? It suggests a difference between these two candidates.

Hamas and Hezbollah […] are proxies er wars of Iran, which is the very same country which constantly shouts, 'Death to America! Death to Israel.' So I think one of John McCain's strengths as president, frankly is that our allies and our friends around the world will trust him and our enemies like Hamas and Iran will fear him and they need to fear him.

[…]

BLITZER: Do you have any doubt about Senator Obama's commitment to maintain a very supportive role for the United States as far as Israel is concerned?

LIEBERMAN: I have no doubt about that. […] Senator Obama has said he would sit down without condition with Ahmadinejad, the president of Iran. That not only gives prestige to a terrible America and Israel hater, but it also threatens our allies in the region.

[…] Senator McCain has more experience, more balance, knows when to be tough, knows when to be soft […].

Olbermann and Alter Characterize Lieberman as a 'Hatchet Man' for John McCain (MSNBC 05/12/ 08 8:30pm)
[Clip opens with Lieberman interview on Blitzer from previous Sunday.]

KEITH OLBERMANN: So McCain has what in Joe Lieberman? Is he a hatchet man? Is he a hatchet man sort of dressed up in independent or bi-partisan clothing? What is his role?

JONATHAN ALTER: Hatchet man's a good way to describe him and it's very useful for John McCain. […] You gotta realize: Joe Lieberman has been a hatchet man going back to when he was first elected to the Senate. […] What he does is sort of under these almost clerical clothing he will pull out the knife and stick it in and use his piety and his reputation for moral rectitude as a cover for some very negative politics.

[…]

ALTER: […] This guilt by association going on in this campaign has reached almost absurd lengths. I mean, do we want to say, because John McCain went down to Liberty University where Jerry Falwell was not long done with saying we had it coming on 9/11, that this was retaliation for AIDS, God's vengeance, are we assuming that somehow reflects John McCain's views? No.

So why imply or suggest, in any fashion, that something that Hamas says tells us anything whatsoever about who Barack Obama is.

OLBERMANN: It's one thing if you say—you use that perhaps the John Hagee analogy—that you've sought somebody's endorsement, as McCain has John Hagee, well that's one thing. You get the endorsement and everything that comes with the endorsement including the guy. […]

Highlight #8
TV Networks Have Ignored Pentagon Pundits Scandal, Kurtz Claims (CNN 05/11/08 10:27am)
HOWARD KURTZ: The networks continue to ignore that New York Times story about TV's military analysts getting briefings and talking points from the Pentagon as they defended the Iraq war effort. We've reported twice on this program a huge batch of documents and emails show how cozy that relationship was.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But now comes an audio tape of a 2006 meeting between more than a dozen analysts and Don Rumsfeld in which some of the retired military officers are giving the secretary advice on selling the war.

AUG 18, 2006 TAPE: We would love for you to take the offensive and just go out there and just crush these people. You are the leader, you're our guy. You go on O'Reilly eating out of your hand because you're smart.

KURTZ: 'Eating out of your hand'! And these men were presenting themselves as objective military analysts.

Olbermann Underscores Significant Embarrassment for Bush Admin (MSNBC 05/12/08 8:36pm)
[#3: Siegelman-Gate #2: Blackwater-gate]

KEITH OLBERMANN: Major General Kevin Bergner convened a news conference in Baghdad last Thursday to list 20,000 items of ammunition, explosives and weapons captured or uncovered by US and Iraqi governmental forces in the last few weeks of fighting. [...] The point? This was the big day. This was the big day, according to the La Times that he American military was to show the media of the world the conclusive evidence that, at least, some of the weaponry used by Iraqi insurgents had been supplied by Iran.

A US military spokesman confirming to that newspaper that that's what the dog and pony show was to include. They were all ready to show off Iran's tangible responsibility for some of the haul of the machinery of death to establish the link between American fatalities and Iran: Trademarks or company logos or 'Made in Teheran' stickers or something. When US explosives experts took a second look at all this stuff they then said: None of this is from Iran.

[...] Amount of tangible evidence linking Iran to anti-American uprisings in Baghdad: None. You do realize they are making this up about Iran.

Highlight #9
Olbermann Highlight's McCain Link to Doug Goodyear, Pro-Dictatorship Lobbyist (MSNBC 05/12/08 8:48pm)
KEITH OLBERMANN: Our runner-up, Doug Goodyear, nominated by Senator McCain as manager of this summer's republican convention. A McCain spokesman said, 'His management experience and expertise made him an ideal choice for the gig.' Then it turned out Goodyear is also CEO of a firm called DCI, which got $348k for lobbying on behalf of the military dictatorship of Myanmar; the one currently blocking relief aid to its own citizens, devastated after last week's cyclones.

Top McCain Aides Resign in Connection with Myanmar Junta (CNN 05/12/08 5:03pm)
WOLF BLITZER: In the wake of Myanmar's cyclone, Senator John McCain has been hammering the military junta there. But it turns out two of his aides had ties to the same military leaders. Mary Snow is joining us now. This must be quite an embarrassment for the McCain Campaign.

MARY SNOW: Wolf, enough for two resignations to come over the weekend. The McCain camp says it only learned of the past ties on Saturday. The McCain camp says it's moving on and doing so minus two aids who resigned after it was revealed their lobbying firm once did work for Myanmar's military junta. Republican presidential hopeful, Senator John McCain has called it one of the most ruthless juntas in the world. He's urging for help for the victims cyclone that killed tens of thousands of people in Myanmar . . .

JOHN MCCAIN: They live under one of the more oppressive and repressive regimes in all the world including Asia. And so I hope that this will highlight to the people of the world and the ASEAN nations how brutal this regime is.

SNOW: Newsweek first reported about the public relations background of Doug Goodyear, head of the DCI group, and the man chosen by the McCain group to run the GOP convention. Justice department files showed the Myanmar regime paid the firm more than $340,000 in 2002 to help boost its public relations image with congress and the administration. Goodyear resigned his position over the weekend "so as not to become a distraction in this campaign". A short time later a second McCain aide with ties to the firm stepped aside. The campaign says Doug Davenport, a regional campaign manager, resigned also to avoid being a distraction. One republican strategist said he doesn't think the fallout will hurt McCain, who has prided himself on being independent of lobbyist influence.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

RICH GALEN: Washington is a single industry town. The industry is the federal government. And I suspect that almost everybody who's at a senior position in any major campaign has some ties with somebody that you might want to think twice about.

MARY SNOW: Now we did try to reach both of the men who resigned through the lobbying firm the DCI group but didn't get an immediate response.

Highlight #10
"Bush Fatigue" Hurts McCain's Fundraising, Especially in Texas (CNN 05/12/08 5:06pm)
JACK CAFFERTY: Money is the coin of the realm in presidential elections and it may be causing John McCain some heartburn and sleepless nights. The reason: the presumptive Republican nominee is struggling to get money from many of the same industries that helped to fund President Bush's campaigns. Bloomberg News reports that many people who work for securities & investment firms, construction companies, the pharmaceutical and energy industries have been turned off by John McCain's record and are in fact giving more money to Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton. The two Democrats each raised about $11 million from these four industries through the end of March and that compares with only $6 million for John McCain. In 2004, President Bush raised three times more money from those four industries than John Kerry did. Meanwhile, another sign of potential money trouble, the Houston Chronicle says that Texas. Texas! Has been slow to warm to John McCain. Three months after sewing up the nomination, John McCain has yet to get money from most of the top Texas donors. In fact, John McCain has raised less in Texas than Hillary Clinton or Barack Obama. What's wrong with this picture? One political analyst puts it this way, "If a Republican is not outraising a Democrat in Texas, where are they going to outraise a Democrat? Vermont?" Unquote. One Texas fundraiser says it's been easier to raise money for Democrat in the Lone Star state this year and he says the reason is, "Bush Fatigue."

--
Evan Whitbeck
Progressive Media USA
202.609.7677 (office)
360.480.0786 (cell)
EWhitbeck@progressivemediausa.org
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "German Marshall Fund" <press@gmfus.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 9/22/2015 6:00:00 PM
Subject: GMF's World Wire: Refugee Crisis | Future of Security in Asia | Russia and the West

If you have problems viewing this email, you can view it as a web page. To view the mobile-friendly web page click here

G | M | F The German Marshall Fund of the United States
STRENGTHENING TRANSATLANTIC COOPERATION

Our Organization | Our Work | Our Events | Our Experts | Support GMF

GMF's World Wire

September 23, 2015

The Refugee Crisis: Perspectives from Across Europe

Newspapers have been dominated by images, both heartening and horrifying, of Europe's worsening refugee crisis. In this brief, GMF experts from across Europe examine the scope of the crisis and the different national reactions to it.

READ MORE

Peace in Asia Requires a "Proactive" Japan

Daniel Twining
Japan needs to secure itself against new dangers that did not exist when its national security laws were originally enacted. | Nikkei Asian Review

READ MORE

China, a Wounded Tiger, Could Lash Out

Aaron Friedberg
All eyes are on the gyrating Chinese stock market. This summer's upheaval may accelerate developments that threaten the peace of Asia. | Los Angeles Times

READ MORE

Tweet of the Week

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

@supaluo :
"Diversity counts people; but inclusion is when people count." @allen_tonya #GMFBUILD @HWCOM_Diversity

RETWEET

U.S. and European Russia Policy: Toward A Strategy

On September 21, the Transatlantic Academy hosted the opening conference of its eighth fellowship year, focused on the theme of “Russia and the West.”

READ MORE

Western Balkan Youth Cooperation

A highlight of the recent Western Balkans Summit was the signing of a Joint Declaration on the Establishment of the Regional Youth Cooperation Office of the Western Balkans.

READ MORE

Policy Leadership Civil Society

Follow

Strengthening Transatlantic Cooperation

Our Organization
About GMF
Career Opportunities
Press Room

Our Work
Leadership
Policy
Civil Society
Research & Analysis
Transatlantic Academy

Our Events
Major Conferences & Forums
Recent & Upcoming Events

Our Experts
Find an Expert

Manage preferences | Forward email | Unsubscribe | Subscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Robby Mook" <re47@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Kristina Schake" <kschake@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 4/19/2015 1:27:04 PM
Subject: Re: FOR REVIEW: Statement for NYT story on Clinton Cash

Looks good from my end.

On Apr 19, 2015, at 8:26 PM, Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> Can people weigh in quickly? To make this into the paper we need to respond right away.
>
> On Sun, Apr 19, 2015 at 8:23 PM, Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > Thanks Brian - looks good
> >
> > Sent from my iPhone
> >
> > On Apr 19, 2015, at 8:09 PM, Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> >
> > All,
> >
> > As you are all aware, Jo Becker from the NYT's investigative unit is one of several reporters at work on stories based on material provided by the publisher of the upcoming Clinton Cash book. Jo's story is scheduled to run in as soon as one week.
> >
> > Separately, this afternoon, Amy Chozick from the NYT called us to indicate she had obtained a copy of the book on her own and intends to file a separate story tomorrow. Her story will not unpack all of the book's claims -- she will leave that to Jo. Instead, she will do a more process-y story about the book's existence, the fact that the publisher has approached multiple media outlets in advance of the book's publication to spoon-feed them some of the book's research, and also remark on the fact that Rand Paul continues to drop hints about the book's contents such that it appears they may be some coordination with individual Republican campaigns.
> >
> > We think this story, though it was not originated by us, could end up being somewhat helpful in casting the book's author as having a conservative agenda. Moreover, we think Amy is suspicious of the arrangements that the book's publisher has reached with the various media outlets (including her own paper). In fact, Jo Becker is apparently trying to get this story killed because she thinks it will undermine her investigative piece later this month. But so far it is running in tomorrow's paper.
> >
> > Amy is seeking a response from us on what our approach is to the looming publication of the book and the apparently well coordinated rollout. We have drafted the below response, and wanted you all to see it and provide feedback before we sent it off. Please note, however, that in order to get the statement into the story, we probably need to provide it by about 8:30 tonight. So apologies for the tight turnaround, but here it is:
> >
> > > "We always expected that while Hillary Clinton was focused on how to help everyday Americans get ahead, the Republicans would focus their efforts on attacks rather than ideas. It appears that this book is being used to aid this coordinated attack strategy, twisting previously known facts into absurd conspiracy theories. It will not be the first work of partisan-fueled fiction about the Clintons' record, and we know it will not be the last."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Thank you,
Brian

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 8/7/2014 9:30:09 AM
Subject: William Rivers Pitt | The Dumpster Fire of Obama's Moral Authority

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Thursday, 7 August 2014

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

William Rivers Pitt | The Dumpster Fire of Obama's Moral Authority

William Rivers Pitt, Truthout: On Friday, Mr. Obama chose to soft-pedal the disgrace of torture, called the perpetrators "patriots," and told those of us upset about the whole thing not to be "sanctimonious" in our indignation. With this, the president lost any moral authority he had left.

Read the Article

Time to Stop Criminalizing Immigrants

James Kilgore, Truthout: Last week US authorities began to place ankle bracelets on a few newly arrived refugees. This represents a continuation of the criminalization and punishment of immigrants. Meanwhile, the root causes of the refugee crisis remain unaddressed.

Read the Article

Against Forgetting: The Phoenix Program and the Awakening of Historical Memory

Kara Z. Dellacioppa, Truthout: The republication of Douglas Valentine's The Phoenix Program, as the first installment in a series of repressed, forgotten books by Open Road Media, offers the opportunity to observe the continuity between the CIA's secret war against civilians in Vietnam and our own "Homeland Security" apparatus.

Read the Review

Palestine: The Pulse of Third World Revolt

Bryan Van Hulst, Truthout: As Israel commits genocide in Gaza, Palestine opens up wounds of colonial trauma connecting Third World people in their struggles with racial injustice, colonial occupation and imperial domination across borders. In song and protest, Third World solidarity with Palestine is imagining a de-colonial liberation that makes other worlds possible.

Read the Article

Richard D. Wolff | Poor Polls and Obama's

BuzzFlash

Former Israeli Prime Minister Committed Assassinations and Massacres: Wasn't He a Terrorist?

Mark Karlin, BuzzFlash at Truthout: Yitzhak Shamir was a member of the Stern Gang "in the 1940s, when he sent Jewish fighters out to kill British officers whom he saw as occupiers. He was a wanted man then; to the British rulers of Palestine he was a terrorist, an assassin."

Read the BuzzFlash Commentary

Gaza: Our Bodies Are Spent, but Our Spirit Endures

Read the Article at the Middle East Eye

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Missed Opportunity

Richard D. Wolff, Truthout: What if President Obama had rejected conventional political advice and pushed for a new New Deal? What if an effective, nonaligned left had pushed for such a program?

Read the Article

It's a Hardrock Life

Mary Catherine O'Connor, Earth Island Journal: In Wisconsin's picturesque Northwoods, a big battle over iron-ore extraction is pitting environmentalists and Native Americans against mining companies and their political allies.

Read the Article

As Palestinians Go to ICC, Human Rights Watch Alleges Israeli War Crimes for Shooting Fleeing Gazans

Amy Goodman and Nermeen Shaikh, Democracy Now!: In a report this week, Human Rights Watch accused Israeli soldiers of shooting and killing fleeing civilians in Gaza, citing interviews with seven Palestinians in the village of Khuza'a.

Watch the Video and Read the Transcript

As a Man-Made Famine Looms, Christmas Comes Early to South Sudan

Nick Turse, TomDispatch: President Obama pledged US partnership to South Sudan, emphasizing security and development. There's precious little evidence of either of these at the UN camps, and even less in vast areas of the countryside now teetering on the edge of a catastrophic famine.

Read the Article

Climate Change: Point of No Return

Margaret Kimberley, Black Agenda Report: Extreme weather conditions around the globe, including rising temperatures, droughts, crop failures, melting sea ice, rising sea levels, disappearing glaciers and the loss of plant and animal species, all point in only one direction. The tipping point toward the sixth great extinction is taking place right now.

Read the Article

New Coal Ash Threat Identified: Toxic Dust Hurting Lungs, Hearts

Sue Sturgis, Facing South: Water pollution is not the only environmental threat from poorly regulated coal ash: A new report identifies serious health risks from airborne coal ash, which will be a growing problem for North Carolina and other states as they shift from wet to dry storage.

Read the Article

Economic Update: From Bad Loans to Taxing the Property of the Wealthy

Richard D. Wolff, Economic Update / Truthout: This segment includes an update on the Pentagon's overpayments and a discussion of how mortgages are tilting toward the rich, as well as coverage of the subprime car loan bubble and the silence around intangible property tax. We also discuss the economic organizations of the Republican and Democratic Parties, and more on socialism and Marx.

The Nuclear Era: Trembling in Fear of Our Folly

Read the Article at BuzzFlash

Torture at Abu Ghraib Followed CIA's Manual

Read the Article at The Boston Globe

Charles P. Pierce | Meet the Methane

Read the Article at Esquire

Monsanto Ordered to Pay $93 Million to Small Town for Poisoning Citizens

Read the Article at RINF News

Here's How Austerity Torpedoed the Economic Recovery

Read the Article at Business Insider

Khmer Rouge Leaders Found Guilty of Crimes Against Humanity and Jailed for Life

Read the Article at The Guardian

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Listen to the Radio Segment

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages
Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047
Subscribe | Unsubscribe
Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Cammie Croft" <cammie@progressiveaccountability.org>
To:	bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date:	7/19/2008 8:34:24 AM
Subject:	[big campaign] John McCain Tracking Video: Week in Review 07/19/08
Attachments:	WeeklyYouTube 07-18-08.doc

Hello All,

In case you missed it, check out the top clips we captured this week at McCain town hall meetings:

- McCain says Czechoslovakia ... AGAIN! http://youtube.com/watch?v=i0XQ6zlP518
- McPander says he'll fully fund Head Start even though he's voted against it http://youtube.com/watch?v=rHUmFKPP55o
- McCain calls immigration reform "top priority," promises "one single comprehensive bill" that includes path to legalization http://youtube.com/watch?v=C0xB5buJyqI
- McCain accidentally (and likely unknowingly) makes awkward Brokeback Mountain reference to questioner in cowboy hat http://youtube.com/watch?v=dVbM9mIEBQk
- McCain: "I'm an unapologetic supporter of NAFTA" http://youtube.com/watch?v=-NQ3IrSUWj0
- McCain: "You can't compete with other automobiles manufacturers if you lay somebody off and pay them full salary for the rest of their life." http://youtube.com/watch?v=af9e35w65ag
- McCain on free trade: "I'm not that much of an expert" but "I believe in free trade" http://youtube.com/watch?v=iIsQ5dUDlVc
- McCain asked about preemptive war, responds "I believe we were justified in going into Iraq" http://youtube.com/watch?v=faM7Vz2KzlQ
- McCain: "At the moment, I support stem cell research" http://youtube.com/watch?v=5dpAfeOHkhk
- Sign outside McCain NAACP event: 'McCain Voted Against MLK Day' http://youtube.com/watch?v=2uKwuE6zWk0
- McSame demonstrators outside Wisconsin Town Hall Meeting http://youtube.com/watch?v=xlDP0mLOmUM

Blast from the Past:
With Afghanistan now making headlines, here's an old clip with some new meaning.
McCain: "In the long term, we may muddle through Afghanistan."
JOHN MCCAIN: "[...] There has been a rise in al Qaeda activity along the border. There has been some increase in U.S. casualties. I am concerned about it, but I'm not as concerned as I am about Iraq today, obviously, or I'd be talking about Afghanistan. But I believe that if Karzai can make the progress that he is making, that -- in the long term, we may muddle through in Afghanistan."
(Speech to Council on Foreign Relations; Washington, DC 11/05/03)
TO VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=Wazv45RYj60
TO DOWNLOAD: http://issuealliance.box.net/shared/vapsj8j4sw

Enjoy!

Cammie

--
Cammie L. Croft
Tracking/Media Monitoring Director
Progressive Accountability Office

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

cammie@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7679 (office)
206-999-3064 (cell)

P.S. Here are the full transcripts:

VIDEO with FULL TRANSCRIPTS

McCain says Czechoslovakia ... AGAIN!
JOHN MCCAIN: "I've suggested a long time ago a League of Democracies and it's very clear that Russia and China and especially Russia will veto significant measures, which would impact the behavior of the Iranians. And I regret that. And I regret some of the recent behavior that Russia has exhibited [...] including reduction in oil supplies to Czechoslovakia after they agreed with us on missile defense system, et cetera."

(Town Hall Meeting; Albuquerque, NM 07/15/08)
TO VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=i0XQ6zlP518
TO DOWNLOAD: http://issuealliance.box.net/shared/ozkz1fx44w

McPander says he'll fully fund Head Start even though he's voted against it QUESTIONER: I work with Head Start workers and federal funding has not been allocated to those workers. The congress has not approved the funding. The workers are making minimal wages to provide educational opportunities to our young people.

What are you going to do now, as a senator and go back and give the funding that is needed so Head Start workers and families can receive the funds that are needed to educate the poor?

JOHN MCCAIN: I obviously support Head Start programs. [...] I would be glad to fully fund those programs, but there has to be monitoring. There has to be measurable success. There has to be [...] a return on the taxpayers dollars that these programs actually are beneficial and we need to review them from time to time as to see how they can do a better job and there's no reason--there's no reason why you should resent any scrutiny, any oversight and any evaluation because I'll support the full funding, if you'll agree with that. How's that?

QUESTIONER: I will agree that--

MCCAIN: Thank you!
(NAACP Speech; Cincinnati, OH 07/16/08)
TO VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=rHUmFKPP55o

McCain calls immigration reform "top priority," promises "one single comprehensive bill" that includes path to legalization
QUESTIONER: [...] First of all, my father's a Korean war veteran and he and I both would like to thank you for your service; all of your service. We also want to be clear about the choice that we're making. You say you are for comprehensive reform. You have also said that you want enforcement first.

We are wondering, is this comprehensive reform include the 12 million undocumented immigrants and will it be in one bill and will you do what Senator Obama has said he will do is make this [...] a top priority in his first year as president.

JOHN MCCAIN: [...] First of all, as I said in my remarks and I'll try to make my answer brief, although it's a very important question, especially for a lot of people in this room. If it wasn't my highest priority, I never would have, at great risk, including to achieve the nomination of my party, and risking alienating some parts of my own party, making it the highest priority, sitting down with Senator Ted Kennedy and doing what Americans want us to do and that's democrat and republican sitting down together and working out solutions and working on your behalf and not putting the party first and doing what I've always done is put my country first.

I'll say to you again, we had to take tough votes, we republicans and democrats who joined together. Senator Obama went out, at the request of the labor unions, and voted for amendments that would have killed the legislation and that's a fact, sir. That's a fact.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I took tough votes. Of course, it was my top priority and it will be my top priority. Otherwise I wouldn't have done what I did.

I think my actions speak for themselves. [...] My friends, why did we fail? Why did we fail twice—not once, but twice—weeks of debate before the United States senate and that's because many Americans remember that, in 1986, we passed a law that gave amnesty to a couple of million people and we said we would secure our borders and we didn't secure our borders. My friends, Secretary Chertoff will tell you that there's two-million people of the 12 million who are in this country who have committed crimes in this country and obviously we don't want those people in this country and I think we all understand that and appreciate it.

We had a plan that—and still do—and it's comprehensive, but we do need to have our borders secured, which we can do in fairly rapid fashion. So, if we're gonna pass the legislation, we have to give the American people the confidence that we're not only securing our borders because of the issue of illegal immigration, but, my friends you know what's happening with the drug traffic across our borders, which is killing young Americans. The drug cartels, sir are moving drugs across into the United States of America. By the way, I'm proud of President Calderon, who I recently met with.

I am very proud of the Merida Initiative, where we're gonna work together. The United States of America and Mexico and we're gonna stop these drug cartels and they're killing off Mexican police at great numbers, my friends and they're doing terrible things. I work with the Mexican government. I know them. We will stop it.

So you can have confidence it was my highest priority a couple years ago, for years, and it's my top priority today. It'll be a top priority tomorrow and I think I prove that in my actions and I hope you understand that and I will vote against amendments such as those presented by Senator Obama on the floor of the Senate and people in my own party on the floor of the senate that would have killed that legislation. I'll oppose those kinds of amendments [...]. [Pre-empting questioner's follow-up] Yes, yes, yes, yes.

QUESTIONER: One bill?!

MCCAIN: Yes sir.

QUESTIONER: One single bill.

MCCAIN: Of course.

QUESTIONER: With both the—that legalizes and provides the pathway to citizenship for the undocumented—is that what you're saying? One single bill.

MCCAIN: One single comprehensive bill, but first we have to assure the American people that the borders are secure. We have to have that done and, my friends, if you don't want to do that, then I have to tell ya, to bring it up twice, we don't pass it. Then we don't pass the legislation. I mean, it's not that any much more complicated than that and that's the reality, but I guarantee you Americans are ready for comprehensive immigration reform because they're sick and tired of the patchwork of laws.

Look—the great mayor of San Diego, Jerry Sanders is sitting right here and I'll tell ya, he runs into this problem every day and there's nothing he's told me he wants more than comprehensive immigration reform because he's happy to do things that the federal government should have been doing a long, long time ago. Am I right, mayor? Thank you, sir. Thank you and congratulations on your recent re-election.
(Speech to LaRaza; San Diego, CA 07/14/08)
To VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=C0xB5buJyqI

McCain accidentally (and likely unknowingly) makes awkward Brokeback Mountain reference to questioner in cowboy hat
JOHN MCCAIN: "[...] So I want to tell you without getting uh, emotional about it. But when I think about America, I'll think about you and your wonderful partner there next to you and-- [laughter from the audience] err, friend. [More laughter] A friend! Excuse me. Your friend next to you. I [McCain hesitates] certainly didn't mean to get personal in any [more laughter] conversation that you have.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"But I look at you both, I look at you both, and I see the face of America and why these town hall meetings are so important. Because your question wasn't an academic one."
(Town Hall Meeting; Albuquerque, NM 07/15/08)
To VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=dVbM9mIEBQk

McCain: "I'm an unapologetic supporter of NAFTA"
JOHN MCCAIN: "I recently traveled to Colombia and Mexico [APPLAUSE] because I understand how vitally important it is to the prosperity and security of our country to strengthen our trade, investment and diplomatic ties to other countries in our hemisphere. I have often traveled over the years to Central and South America, and I have learned our relationships there are as important, if not more important, as any relationships we have in the world. It is the reason why I'm an unapologetic supporter of NAFTA, the Central American Free Trade Agreement, and the Colombian Free Trade Agreement, and why I believe a hemispheric free trade agreement is a worthy and necessary goal whose time has come."
(Speech; San Diego, CA 07/14/08)
To VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=-NQ3IrSUWj0

McCain: "You can't compete with other automobiles manufacturers if you lay somebody off and pay them full salary for the rest of their life."
AUDIENCE MEMBER: "After 9/11, the United States and the economy took a tragic fall. [...] The American automotive industry was the first to stand up and do something for our country. We provided rebates to get the economy going again. And since then, we've continued giving rebates and giving our products away for next to nothing to a point that our companies are now on a very uneven path and our future is uncertain. I understand technology will advance us, but when is the government going to stick up for the people that first stepped up to put this country back on track after 9/11?"

JOHN MCCAIN: "Well first of all as I have said I would support tax credits for Americans who choose to buy the Volt and other and other automobiles that put us on the path to energy independence. I believe that the Federal government should invest in pure research and development. I think as you know one of the hurdles to development of any electric automobile is of course the battery issue. [...] I'd be glad and would strongly support pure research and development in the development of this battery with greater capacity, less weight, and is more disposable. So, there are many ways that I would be glad to support this industry.

"But at the end of the day, there are problems, some of which have been addressed, between labor and management. I have to give you some straight talk. You can't compete with other automobile manufacturers if you lay somebody off and pay them full salary for the rest of their life. Can't do it. It's not going to be competitive. So, I will do everything that I can to support this industry."
(Town Hall Meeting; Warren, MI 07/18/08)
To VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=af9e35w65ag

McCain on free trade: "I'm not that much of an expert" but "I believe in free trade"
AUDIENCE MEMBER: [...] My concern with the free trade is when we source to a Canadian supplier who was our tier one source, and I have a part that has three or four pieces that go together. Canadian law states that they must go to a Canadian source in order to purchase their secondary pieces that go on that part. Well, that doesn't seem fair trade to me then they're not allowed to come to the US and get a better price so that we can have a reduction in the part that I'm buying for my vehicle. What would you do to help us in that area for free trade?

JOHN MCCAIN: "I would take them to the arbitration that is supposed to be part of our free trade agreement -- the North American Free Trade Agreement - where their violations, there's been cases concerning Canadian lumber and there's been other cases. I would take them right to those arbitration panels.
"I think it also maybe in violation to the WTO agreement, but I'm not that much of an expert. But this seems to me clearly in violation of the agreement that we made that we would have free and open markets for all of our products between our two countries.

"I just want to assure you, I believe in free trade. But I don't believe in the abuse of free trade. I don't believe that people should have special advantages over American workers and over American products. And I will exercise those capabilities that I have in order to reach arbitration and reach fairness and justice for American workers and American products.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"And I also want to tell you the next China, the next toy that comes in from China with arsenic on it may poison our young children will be the last toy that came into the United States of America from China."
(Town Hall Meeting; Warren, MI 07/18/08)
To VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=iIsQ5dUDlVc

McCain asked about preemptive war responds "I believe we were justified in going into Iraq"
AUDIENCE MEMBER: "This is on Iraq, Iran and Afghanistan. We preemptively went into Iraq. And not one terrorist came from Iraq. And now there's Iran. And you made sort of the joke of 'bomb bomb bomb Iran' -- I hope that was a joke. And Osama's still running around somewhere. So, I wonder what your feelings are on preemptively going into countries where we don't really like the leader if they have oil or if they don't have oil. And, what you plan to do if you're President on going into Iran, not going to Iran, pulling out of Iraq, not pulling out of Iraq, going into Afghanistan, or ay other countries that you think you want to win wars with, and we lost Vietnam, you said you knew how to win wars, we didn't win there. And I don't know if winning wars is necessarily something that a President wants to do or should do."

JOHN MCCAIN: "Well, thank you, you ask a very profound question and I appreciate it. And I will again not try to give a long response because, because we have other questions but since Americans are in harm's way and Americans have made enormous sacrifice, I think it's worthy and the Iranian threat and the situation in Afghanistan could lead to further greater sacrifices

"I'd like to just say to you very- we are in a dangerous world. There's the threat of radical Islamic extremism, which threatens everything we stand for and believe in. This is an evil sometimes it's hard for us to comprehend and they're active in a lot of places in the world, there is some information they try to reestablish cells in the United States of America. Obviously, there's some small success in Europe. It's an evil that's hard to encompass.

"Not long ago, al Qaeda took two mentally disabled young women, put suicide vests on them, and sent them into a market place in Baghdad and by remote control detonated those suicide vests. It's hard for us to encompass how evil these people are. They like to cut off people's heads and put it out on the Internet. [...] They're dedicated to the extinction of everything we stand for and believe in.

"Now, I believe we were justified in going into Iraq based on the fact that every intelligence agency in the world, including the United States of America, believed that Saddam Hussein had nuclear weapons. He'd used them- excuse me- weapons of mass destruction, and he had used them twice before and there's no doubt about his willingness and desire to develop them and use them again. The sanctions were breaking down, American planes were being shot at, there's multi-billion dollar oil for food scandal in the UN, etc. etc.

"But that's a history and that is for historians to argue about and I'll be glad to have that discussion at some academic forum.

"But, we are there. And we went there and we were losing. And we were losing badly. And I went over there early on and saw the strategy and said 'this can't succeed, it's going to fail, we gotta change it.' I was criticized by the Republicans for being disloyal. I said, at the darkest time in my political aspirations for President I said we've got to send 'we've got to Send 30,000 more troops over there.' Everybody- the political pundits and others said the McCain campaign is dead. And, my friends, I would rather lose a political campaign than lose a war. And I said we had to do this new strategy and that is a strategy, it isn't just an injection of troops.

"And they have succeeded. They have succeeded. My friends, they have succeeded. And I'd be glad to give you all the data to back that up.

"Now have we had victory, final victory? No. The al-Qaeda and others are back on their heels but they still are intent on doing bad things. And they'd love to try to resurrect their efforts. And they've still got the Iranians who are exporting the most lethal explosive devices into Iraq that is killing young Americans. And we've still got the Iranians [...] moving forward with developing nuclear weapons. But in Iraq, we have a government that is pretty effective. We have a justice system that is stumbling, and hauntingly moving forward.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"And we have succeeded. I'm not saying we are succeeding- we have succeeded. And we will -- we will- win this war. We will win this war if we don't do what Senator Obama wanted to do -- that's set a date for withdrawal and predicate it on a date and not conditions on the ground."
(Town Hall Meeting; Warren, MI 07/18/08)
To VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=faM7Vz2KzlQ

McCain: "At the moment, I support stem cell research"
QUESTIONER: What I wanted to ask you, Senator McCain is how do you feel on the stem cell research, and uh, just how do you feel on the stem cell research?

MCCAIN: Well, I feel that we should fund stem cell research. I do believe that there is now new technology advances called. On skin cell, skin cell research, which I hope will make this discussion an academic one. Because we're now making dramatic advances in technologies that we will not have to do stem cell research that other technologies will suffice. But at the moment, I support stem cell research because of the incredible potential that it has for curing some of the most terrible diseases that afflict mankind.
(Town Hall Meeting; Kansas City, MO 07/17/08)
To VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=5dpAfeOHkhk

Sign outside McCain NAACP event: 'McCain Voted Against MLK Day'
Demonstrator outside of McCain's NAACP Speech: 'MCCAIN VOTED AGAINST MLK DAY'
(Demonstrator Outside McCain NAACP Event; Cincinnati, OH 07/16/08)
To VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=2uKwuE6zWk0

McSame demonstrators outside Wisconsin Town Hall Meeting
Description: b-roll, Demonstrators with " McSame " stamp demonstrating / mock - performing before a McCain town hall
(Town Hall Meeting; Hudson, WI 07/11/08)
To VIEW: http://youtube.com/watch?v=xIDP0mLOmUM
To DOWNLOAD: http://issuealliance.box.net/shared/7ds4vr3oco

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To: "Milia Fisher" <milia.fisher@gmail.com>
"Eryn Sepp" <eryn.sepp@gmail.com>
Date: 4/12/2015 2:16:54 PM
Subject: Fwd: draft surrogate talkers -- responding to day 1 attacks

---

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Ian Sams <isams@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Sun, Apr 12, 2015 at 9:15 PM
Subject: draft surrogate talkers -- responding to day 1 attacks
To: hrcrapid@googlegroups.com

Hey folks. Here are some points we pulled together for surrogates going on TV -- not a wide blast -- on how to respond to day one attacks on HRC. Thoughts? Adrienne/Karen/etc. can get to surrogates once we're all good.

Thanks.
Ian

OPENING DAY -- SURROGATE TALKING POINTS ON GOP ATTACKS

Today we've seen a wide range of attacks from the entire GOP field and their allies. Below are some points to respond -- keeping the focus on Hillary's desire to focus on voters while the Republicans are trotting out tired attacks on her.

- Republicans can focus on attacking her, but Hillary is focused on meeting voters and having real conversations about issues facing everyday Americans. This is the start of the different kind of campaign that Hillary wants to run -- one that is squarely focused on having a conversation with voters -- answering their questions, asking them questions and sharing ideas.

- Meanwhile, Republicans want to be the champions for those at the top. While Hillary is talking to voters and focused on everyday Americans, every single Republican candidate has offered the same tired attacks and the same economic agenda that Americans know rob them of the stability they've worked so hard for -- with a top-down agenda that would stack the deck even more in favor of those at the top.

- Americans have responded clearly that they appreciate Hillary's focus on their issues and their lives, so if Republicans want to keep their focus on tired political attacks, that's their choice.

If pressed on specific GOP attacks on foreign policy/HRC's record at the State Department, stemming from Jeb Bush's video or other attacks:

Job number one for Hillary as Secretary of State was to restore America's leadership after it was badly eroded by eight years of the Bush administration's foreign policy -- two wars, damaged alliances, diminished moral standing, no stopping Iran's nuclear program, and no action on climate. She's proud of her accomplishments.

- Hillary led the effort to build a worldwide coalition to impose the toughest sanctions in history against the Iranians, which forced them to the negotiating table and gave us our best shot at preventing them from acquiring a nuclear weapon.
- Hillary brokered a ceasefire between Israel and Hamas in Gaza, which prevented a wider war and protected Israel's security.
- Hillary stood up to Putin by strengthening NATO, encouraging Europe to find alternative sources of energy, and called him out for trying to rebuild the Soviet Empire.
- Hillary worked with President Obama to get every major developing country, including China and India, to agree for the first time to reduce their carbon emissions and be held accountable for it.
- Hillary put internet freedom, LGBT rights, and women's rights on the global agenda, and defending human rights advocates on the frontlines around the world.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- And, of course, she was part of the President's team making the decision to launch the raid against bin Laden.

Jeb Bush may attack Hillary's time as Secretary of State now, but it's just negative politics meant to gin up his Republican base.

- Jeb Bush in 2013: "Former Secretary Clinton has dedicated her life to serving and engaging people across the world in democracy. These efforts as a citizen, an activist, and a leader have earned Secretary Clinton this year's Liberty Medal." [National Constitution Center, 6/27/2013]

Jeb Bush is advocating for the same failed foreign policy that led us to misguided wars and degraded our nation's standing in the world.

- Jeb Bush on George W. Bush: "I will tell you that I'm the only Republican that was in office when he was office as President that never disagreed with him. And I'm not going to start now. Why would I do that now after two years? …I'm not going to start now. It's just – 'til death do us part." [CNN interview]

--
Ian Sams | Rapid Response Associate
Hillary for America
(423) 915-6592 | @IanSams
Gchat: icsams

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
To view this discussion on the web visit https://groups.google.com/d/msgid/hrcrapid/CABd81JJxcSiv95x3%3Duc5H1fSQ5M9CZZ0deNmoNAwM%2BHKiO-p3Q%40mail.gmail.com.
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Zayneb Shaikley" <zshaikley@clintonfoundation.org>
To:	"Hannah Richert - PC" <hannah@presidentclinton.com>
	"Hannah Richert - PC" <hannah@presidentclinton.com>
	"Bruce Lindsey" <blindsey@clintonfoundation.org>
	"Laura Graham" <lgraham@clintonfoundation.org>
	"Stephanie Streett" <sstreett@clintonfoundation.org>
Date:	9/4/2012 9:50:50 AM
Subject:	Biweekly Report for WJC
Attachments:	Biweekly Report 9.4.12.docx

Hannah,
Attached and below is President Clinton's latest biweekly report.
Please let me know if he has any feedback.
Thanks,
Zayneb

Biweekly Report
William J. Clinton Foundation
September 4, 2012

Alliance for a Healthier Generation

The American Journal of Public Health has released a study detailing updated findings on the impact of the Alliance's School Beverage Agreement with the American Beverage Association, Coca Cola, PepsiCo and Dr Pepper Snapple. The article describes results through the end of the 2009-2010 school year. These results indicate that the Alliance School Beverage Agreement contributed to: 1) a 90 percent reduction in beverage calories shipped to schools (as compared to the previously reported 88 percent); a 97 percent reduction, on a total ounces basis, of shipments of full-calorie soft drinks to schools; and 3) sizable reduction in the percentage of regular sports drinks shipped to schools (a 68 percent reduction at the high school level and an 89 percent reduction at the middle school level).

Chef Lorena Garcia is a contestant on Top Chef Masters and has selected the Alliance as her charity beneficiary.

Ginny Ehrlich will represent the Alliance on a panel on Building Healthier Cities hosted by the Atlantic and National Journal in conjunction with the Democratic National Convention.

The Alliance will join Let's Move for an announcement of a national framework for increasing youth physical activity at the U.S. Open on Saturday, September 1st. The Alliance served as a key advisor for this framework and will play a key national leadership role in disseminating these guidelines to schools and communities across the country.

Clinton Health Matters Initiative

Ginny Ehrlich recently spoke with Congresswoman Mary Bono Mack about our common interests in prescription drug abuse prevention. Congresswoman Mack is a key advocate of policy reform on this matter. They shared strategies and agreed to keep in touch on our respective efforts.

Lionel Rabb has signed on as a sponsor of the January 2013 Health Matters conference in La Quinta.

Discussions with NBC Universal, Comcast, Verizon, General Electric, and Duke University about strategic, technical and monetary support continue. It is likely that NBC will contribute significant coverage of the Clinton Health Matters Initiative (CHMI), including the January Health Matters conference. Verizon will likely offer monetary support, as well as in kind support to build and host the CHMI website and social media presence. Comcast and General Electric will likely offer monetary support. Duke University will likely provide science and measurement support for CHMI.

MAJOR INTERNATIONAL INITIATIVES

Clinton Development Initiative

Malawi

Smallholders in the Anchor Farm project have repaid their input loans at a rate of over 95 percent. As a result, NBS

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Bank has more than tripled the loan commitment available to project farmers for the coming season, again this year with no loan guarantee from CDI.

Rwanda (CHDI)

Work is moving along according to schedule on the Soyco edible oil production plant in Kayonza District. Foundations are complete. The engineer in charge of the weighbridge installation has flown in to supervise the weighbridge instillation, which will be carried out this week.

The harvest for the AGRA Project is complete and data collection is underway for last season's trials. The Eastern Province has decided to grow soybean on 14,000 hectares. The Soyco factory will help with seeds and fertilizer, and the Government will help with 50 percent of the fertilizer as a subsidy to the soybean farmers in order to help the factory get the raw materials needed to produce more oil.

Clinton Giustra Sustainable Growth Initiative

The CGSGI Steering Committee has approved the launching of a Remote Distribution Network pilot in Peru. The pilot will hire female entrepreneurs from Base of the Pyramid neighborhoods in two low-income regions of Peru to sell hard to access products into these areas. In addition to sought-after consumer goods and services, the entrepreneurs will also be selling affordable VisionSpring reading glasses and will screen residents for both cataracts and prescription glasses. If successful, the pilot will be scaled throughout Peru as a means of providing employment and income generation for potentially thousands of Peruvians while also building a much needed remote distribution network which can be used for the delivery of both consumer and social goods.

Clinton Global Initiative

Annual Meeting

CGI currently has 429 paying members registered for the Annual Meeting, 12 fewer than last year at this time (441). Of the total number of registrants, 320 are renewals, eight fewer than last year at this time (328), and 109 are new, four fewer than last year at this time (113).

Oando has renewed as a sponsor for the Annual Meeting in the amount of $150K. Additionally, Hult Business Schools (and the Hult Prize) has agreed to become a sponsor in the amount of $2.25mm over 3 years.

CGI University

We plan to announce the location of CGI U 2013 and open the CGI U 2013 application process soon. Additionally, we will be launching the CGI University Network, which requires member universities to provide at least $10,000 in commitment seed funding and travel stipends for CGI U attendees from their respective campuses.

Year-Round Opportunities for Engagement

CGI members have participated in 60 convenings since we launched the concept of year-round engagement last spring, which entails in-person events and teleconferences organized around our eight tracks. To date, track events have engaged 980 individuals from 570 organizations.

Zayneb K. Shaikley
William J. Clinton Foundation
77 Water Street, New York, NY 10005
T: 917.720.0295 | M: 646.873.0244
E: zshaikley@clintonfoundation.org

This e-mail, and any attachments hereto, is intended only for use by the addressee(s) named herein and may contain legally privileged and/or confidential information. Any unauthorized use or dissemination of this message in whole or in part is strictly prohibited. If you have received it by mistake please notify the sender by return e-mail and delete this message from your system.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 2/8/2015 7:25:21 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Sunday February 8, 2015 Roundup

Correct The Record Sunday February 8, 2015 Roundup:

Headlines:

New York Times: “Economic Plan Is a Quandary for Hillary Clinton’s Campaign”

“With advice from more than 200 policy experts, Hillary Rodham Clinton is trying to answer what has emerged as a central question of her early presidential campaign strategy: how to address the anger about income inequality without overly vilifying the wealthy.”

Washington Post: “Clinton builds a different campaign for 2016. Will she be different, too?”

“There are clear indications, however, that she is determined to put together a campaign organization that is markedly different from the one she had in 2008, designed to avoid both the tactical and strategic mistakes that contributed to her undoing against Barack Obama and the debilitating infighting that plagued the inner circle of what became for a time a dysfunctional campaign.”

Bloomberg: “New Hampshire Poll: Jeb Bush Grabs Narrow Lead”

“The poll also shows former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton dominating her potential Democratic rivals. Clinton, who won the state’s presidential primary in 2008, is the first choice of 56 percent of Democratic primary voters.”

Wall Street Journal blog: Washington Wire: “Sen. Paul Criticizes Libya Intervention as ‘Hillary’s War’”

“Mr. Paul said Hillary Clinton was to blame for what he described as foreign-policy failures, previewing lines of attack for a potential general election match-up.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MSNBC: “Bernie Sanders steps up: I am not Hillary, ‘trust me’”

“The Independent senator from Vermont is actively considering a presidential run in 2016, and hopes to tap into progressive grassroots networks like this one for a potential underdog challenge to all-but-declared Democratic frontrunner Clinton.”

Bloomberg View: Albert Hunt: “Obama's Legacy Will Be Set by Foreign Policy”

“There are two widely divergent views of how all this could play out. The American exceptionalists say Obama is too passive, and the next president, whether Hillary Clinton or a Republican, will have a better appreciation of the need for U.S. global leadership and push a more assertive foreign policy.”

Articles:

New York Times: “Economic Plan Is a Quandary for Hillary Clinton’s Campaign”

By Amy Chozick

February 7, 2015

With advice from more than 200 policy experts, Hillary Rodham Clinton is trying to answer what has emerged as a central question of her early presidential campaign strategy: how to address the anger about income inequality without overly vilifying the wealthy.

Mrs. Clinton has not had to wade into domestic policy since before she became secretary of state in 2009, and she has spent the past few months engaged in policy discussions with economists on the left and closer to the Democratic Party’s center who are grappling with the discontent set off by the gap between rich and poor. Sorting through the often divergent advice to develop an economic plan could affect the timing and planning of the official announcement of her campaign.

Although people close to Mrs. Clinton say she has not yet settled on a specific platform, she is expected to embrace several principles. They include standard Democratic initiatives like raising the minimum wage, investing in infrastructure, closing corporate tax loopholes and cutting taxes for the middle class. Other ideas are newer, such as providing incentives to corporations to increase profit-sharing with employees and changing labor laws to give workers more collective bargaining power.

Behind many of these proposals is a philosophy, endorsed by Mrs. Clinton’s closest economic advisers and often referred to as inclusive capitalism, that contends that a majority of Americans do not want to punish the rich; they just want to feel that they, too, have a chance to succeed. It also calls for corporations to put less emphasis on short-term profits that increase shareholder value and to invest more in employees, the environment and communities.

Whether Mrs. Clinton’s approach will be enough to satisfy the unease over growing economic disparity is unclear. In a Gallup poll conducted last month, 67 percent of Americans said they were dissatisfied with the way income and wealth are distributed in the United States. In the 2008

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Democratic presidential primary, Mrs. Clinton's economic message — summed up by a frequent refrain, "If you work hard, you play by the rules, you ought to be able to get ahead" — resonated with white, working-class voters, who overwhelmingly supported her over Barack Obama.

But in the years since, Mrs. Clinton has come under criticism for delivering speeches to Wall Street banks at more than $200,000 each, roughly four times the median annual household income in the United States, and for comments she made about her family's financial situation, including a lament about being "dead broke" after leaving the White House. And she must convince a middle class that feels frustrated and left behind that she understands its struggles, even as she relies heavily on the financial industry and corporate interests to fund her candidacy.

Nick Merrill, a spokesman for Mrs. Clinton, said she had "a record of bringing people together to solve big problems, while also putting a real premium on accountability."

Asked whether creating an economic message could affect the timeline for her presidential campaign, Mr. Merrill said, "There's no red X on a calendar somewhere, but make no mistake: If she runs, she will present solutions to our toughest challenges."

Mrs. Clinton's economic plan would be more populist and reliant on the government than the centrist approach of trade agreements, welfare reform and deficit reduction associated with her husband, former President Bill Clinton.

"It's not enough to address upward mobility without addressing inequality," said Lawrence H. Summers, a Treasury secretary in the Clinton administration who is among those talking with Mrs. Clinton. "The challenge, though, is to address inequality without embracing a politics of envy."

The debate is extending beyond the Democratic Party as Republicans wade into the issues. "If Americans are working harder than ever, earning less than they once did, our government and our leaders should step up, offer a plan, fix what's wrong," former Gov. Jeb Bush of Florida said in a speech in Detroit last week as he laid the groundwork for his potential 2016 candidacy.

Mrs. Clinton was secretary of state when some major economic debates took hold on Capitol Hill, and as a result, her economic views are still not broadly known. Her approach to poverty was forged in the 1970s, when she went door to door while working for the Children's Defense Fund, leaving her a committed advocate for early childhood education, equal pay for women and paid leave.

But later experiences complicated her worldview. Many of the advocates who knew Mrs. Clinton as a champion for the poor and working-class women felt betrayed in 1996 when, as first lady, she supported Mr. Clinton's overhaul of the welfare system, which gave states more power to remove people from welfare rolls and pledged to cut federal spending on assistance for the poor by nearly $55 billion over six years. She was more skeptical about the North American Free Trade Agreement, which Mr. Clinton signed into law in 1993 and which has also been accused of hurting American workers.

After being elected in New York to the United States Senate in 2000, Mrs. Clinton had another constituency to represent: Wall Street. In 2001, she supported bankruptcy legislation that some Democrats — most notably Elizabeth Warren, now senator from Massachusetts — argued hurt working families and single mothers, and they accused her of doing the bidding of the financial industry. Mrs. Clinton has said she worked to improve the bill.

As a presidential candidate in 2008, Mrs. Clinton angered some of her Wall Street donors when she came out early in support of the regulation of derivatives and other complicated financial products and called for eliminating the "carried interest" loophole that allowed some financiers to avoid paying millions in income taxes. She also said that as president, she would create a cabinet-level position to fight poverty.

When the housing market collapsed, Mrs. Clinton, who had returned to the Senate full time after Mr. Obama defeated her, proposed legislation similar to a New Deal-era program that would allow the government to help homeowners refinance their mortgages. She voted in favor of the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008, which led to the Troubled Asset Relief Program and the multibillion-dollar bailout for automakers.

Last month, Mrs. Clinton reiterated her support for the 2010 Dodd-Frank financial regulation law. "Attacking financial reform is risky and wrong," she wrote on Twitter.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As she dives back into domestic policy, Mrs. Clinton faces an economy in which, even amid steady job growth, weekly earnings for low- and middle-income workers have remained virtually unchanged for 15 years.

“Where has the money gone?” asked Robert B. Reich, a secretary of labor during the Clinton administration. “That is the topic that is embarrassing for people to talk about, particularly in Washington, because even mentioning it creates the potential charge of class warfare.”

Mr. Reich, who recently sent Mrs. Clinton a five-page memo laying out his ideas, said candidates in both parties needed to abandon the politically safe discussion of upward mobility for the poor and middle class that dominated the 1990s, and instead take on the stickier issue of income distribution.

“Upward mobility, equal opportunity — those are safe phrases and safe aspirations,” he said in an interview. “I don’t want to minimize their importance, but they obscure the real issue.”

Mr. Reich is one of some 200 economists and academics who have offered Mrs. Clinton ideas and guidance as she settles on an economic doctrine. Several of Mr. Clinton’s former advisers, including Alan S. Blinder, Robert E. Rubin and Mr. Summers, maintain influence. But Mrs. Clinton has cast a wide net that also includes Joseph E. Stiglitz, a Nobel laureate in economics who has written extensively about inequality; Alan B. Krueger, a professor at Princeton and co-author of “Inequality in America”; and Peter R. Orszag, a former director of the Office of Management and Budget under President Obama. Teresa Ghilarducci, a labor economist who focuses on retirement issues, is also playing a prominent role.

Last month in Washington, a 17-person commission convened by the Center for American Progress, a liberal think tank with close ties to Mrs. Clinton, presented a 166-page report on “inclusive prosperity,” which is among the numerous economic blueprints Mrs. Clinton has reviewed. For some, the solutions proposed by the committee, of which Mr. Summers was co-chairman, did not go far enough.

Dean Baker, an economist and co-director of the Center for Economic and Policy Research, has pushed the idea of a government fee on the sale or purchase of certain financial assets, which he believes could hold Wall Street accountable while funding social services. “Clinton people didn’t want to go near it,” Mr. Baker said.

Mrs. Clinton has not commented on the financial transaction tax or on profit-sharing.

She has expressed support for many of the proposals Mr. Obama laid out in his State of the Union address last month, signaling that they could help shape her agenda. In a post on Twitter, she said the speech had “pointed way to an economy that works for all. Now we need to step up & deliver for the middle class.”

Mrs. Clinton frequently talks about the economic success of the Clinton administration, under which median family income, adjusted for inflation, increased to $56,080 in 1999 from $48,884 in 1993, compared with a decline to $51,017 in 2012 from $55,987 in 2000, according to census data. But she has acknowledged that a globalized economy calls for new ideas, and many are urging her to go beyond her comfort zone and address the deeper frustrations of those who have not shared in that economy’s benefits.

“Long-term answers about education and skills that help change mobility don’t get at the current frustrations and aggravations,” said Austan D. Goolsbee, an economic adviser to Mr. Obama and a professor at the University of Chicago.

“People want to answer the question, ‘Are we going to be O.K.?’ ” Mr. Goolsbee said. “And then the natural question is, ‘Whose fault was that, and let’s go find those people.’ ”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Washington Post: “Clinton builds a different campaign for 2016. Will she be different, too?”

By Dan Balz

February 7, 2015

No one can say what kind of candidate Hillary Rodham Clinton will be once she starts actively campaigning later this year. Last summer’s book tour and later public appearances highlighted the degree to which she is both rusty as a candidate and still grappling with the message for a 2016 campaign.

There are clear indications, however, that she is determined to put together a campaign organization that is markedly different from the one she had in 2008, designed to avoid both the tactical and strategic mistakes that contributed to her undoing against Barack Obama and the debilitating infighting that plagued the inner circle of what became for a time a dysfunctional campaign.

The upper most tier of Clinton’s new team speaks to the changes between 2008 and a 2016 campaign. In John Podesta, designated as the likely chairman, Clinton has something she lacked eight years ago. Podesta is someone who can speak to her almost as a peer. He should be able to offer unvarnished and critical counsel from the perspective of someone who has been White House chief of staff in her husband’s administration and a now a top adviser to Obama. In contrast to many of the people in the upper ranks of the 2008 campaign, Podesta likely will not be timid about speaking frankly to her.

Beyond quiet advice to the candidate, there is an even more important role that Podesta could play in a Clinton 2016 campaign. Because of his stature, personality and long-standing relationship with the Clintons, he can speak authoritatively for the candidate, internally and externally. He brings order — to the extent that anyone can — to an operation that otherwise could be plagued by freelancing among the Clintons’ vast and extended network. He has the opportunity to draw clearer lines of authority and enforce the rules.

In Robby Mook, the designated campaign manager, Clinton has a trusted young strategist who earned her confidence in 2008 by helping to pull off victories in Nevada, Ohio and Indiana. Mook is far younger than Podesta, but he has something that Podesta doesn’t have: fluency in how modern campaigns are run.

Other members of the senior team recruited so far have long, collective experience in presidential campaigns and White House operations, and they have been both allies and rivals.

Joel Benenson, the designated chief strategist, and media adviser designate Jim Margolis were key players in the Obama campaign that defeated Clinton in 2008. Others from Obama’s team are expected to play other key roles. Communications director designate Jennifer Palmieri has top-level White House experience. Communications strategist Mandy Grunwald has been part of Clinton world dating back to Bill Clinton’s 1992 campaign.

Clinton has been reluctant to begin rigorous campaign activity this spring, given the absence of any serious competition for the Democratic nomination at this point. She has often remarked that her husband didn’t announce his candidacy until the fall of 1991. But her team has been warned by veterans of the Obama campaigns not to take the absence of stiff competition for the nomination as an excuse to start slowly. The advice has been pointed: don’t waste 2015. Clinton appears to be taking that advice to heart.

Even in the eight years since she first ran for president, Clinton campaign operations have changed dramatically, particularly in the areas of data, analytics, targeting, digital, social media and organizing. These are enormously challenging — and time consuming — aspects of a presidential campaign.

Obama’s reelection campaign spent most of 2011 trying to build the political, financial and especially the technological infrastructure necessary to wage a general election — and needed every bit of that time and more to work out many of the bugs. And they weren't starting from scratch, as Clinton will be doing. They had spent the years after the 2008 campaign testing, experimenting and refining their operation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mechanics are one thing, but candidate performance is another. Clinton may be building a different campaign operation, but will she be a different candidate in 2016 — and does she need to be?

She is in an unusual — and possibly unusually difficult — position. The lack of competition for the nomination may seem like a gift at this point, leaving her plenty of time to think through issues, outline a message and let Republicans fight among themselves. But she is not exactly like an incumbent running for reelection. She has never won her party's nomination, nor faced a Republican presidential nominee in the heat of a general election.

Enough questions remain from her last campaign that she cannot long afford to take for granted her position atop the Democratic field.

How, for example, does Clinton demonstrate to voters in Iowa, where she stumbled in 2008 and where activists expect serious courtship, that she will be a better and more accessible candidate this time?

She is reluctant to begin too early, but is she prepared eventually to travel more extensively there than before? That will be an early sign of the kind of candidate she intends to be this time. Before a formal announcement, is another listening tour, which she used when she began her campaign for Senate in 2000, the way to make those connections?

How does she engage the media, which long has been a quarrelsome issue for her? She did numerous interviews during her book tour, but as a candidate in 2008 she was far less accessible. Her relations with the traveling press corps in 2008 were often difficult. Today's press corps is larger, more encompassing and more intrusive today than eight years ago.

Here's another small but potentially knotty issue: What does she do about debates with other candidates, to the extent there are others? At this point it's far too early to worry about, but at some point it could become relevant. Does she debate? When and against whom? Could she go through the nomination process without ever debating — and would that put her at a disadvantage against the Republican nominee in a fall campaign?

Clinton has many assets as she gets ready for the campaign that everyone now expects her to run — but vulnerabilities and liabilities as well. Her new team has the experience to help her get ready and to weather whatever unexpected problems arise. She is sending signals that she accepts that this campaign must be different than the last. But the answer to what kind of candidate she will be rests squarely on her shoulders — and remains to be answered.

Bloomberg: "New Hampshire Poll: Jeb Bush Grabs Narrow Lead"

By Michael C. Bender and Lisa Lerer

February 8, 2015, 9:01 a.m. EST

[Subtitle:] Hillary Clinton owns a dominating lead among Democrats.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Jeb Bush has taken a slight lead over other potential Republican presidential candidates in a new Bloomberg Politics/Saint Anselm New Hampshire poll, even though his party's voters have doubts about his famous last name and his positions on immigration and education.

Even if Bush should overcome those doubts to prevail in what is shaping up as one of the most wide-open Republican primaries in the state's recent history, the poll suggests that he is deeply unpopular with likely general-election voters. It's a worrisome sign for his campaign in a battleground state that both parties have targeted during the past several presidential elections.

The poll also shows former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton dominating her potential Democratic rivals. Clinton, who won the state's presidential primary in 2008, is the first choice of 56 percent of Democratic primary voters. Senator Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts, who has said she isn't running, is second at 15 percent, while Vice President Joe Biden and Senator Bernie Sanders of Vermont both have 8 percent.

The poll, taken Jan. 31-Feb. 5 by Washington-based Purple Insights, surveyed 400 Republican primary voters and 400 Democratic primary voters almost exactly a year out from the 2016 New Hampshire primary. It has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.9 percentage points.

Mitt Romney's decision to forgo a third presidential bid clearly upended the Republican contest, with candidates now scrambling to pick up his supporters. Romney, who won the Granite State's 2012 primary on his way to winning the nomination, led a Bloomberg Politics/Saint Anselm poll in November by 19 percentage points; Bush now leads with just 16 percent. Senator Rand Paul of Kentucky is second with 13 percent, Wisconsin Governor Scott Walker is at 12 percent, and New Jersey Governor Chris Christie, coming off a controversy-filled overseas trip, is at 10 percent.

New Hampshire, which traditionally holds the second presidential nominating contest after Iowa, presents a complicated electorate for Bush. The state's Republican voters rejected his brother, George W. Bush, in 2000 in favor of John McCain. His father, George H.W. Bush, lost the state's primary in 1980 but won it in 1988 on his way to the White House.

In a snapshot of potential problems facing the former Florida governor, nearly three out of five Republican primary voters said his strength as a potential candidate was based on his family connections to politics, while just 31 percent said it was due to his unique qualities and achievements. When Democrats were asked the same question about Clinton, only 21 percent cited her family connections as her main strength.

Nancy Clark, a real estate broker based in Gilford, N.H., said she's supporting Bush—at least for now. "I'm just wondering about how people are going to feel about having three Bushes in the White House," Clark said in an interview after the poll was taken. "I'm definitely open. I just want a Republican in the White House, so it's who is going to be able to pull that off."

Bush acknowledged during a speech in Detroit last week that he must present himself to voters in a way that distinguishes him from his father or brother. But the poll shows trouble spots beyond family history. As in Iowa, Republican primary voters are suspicious of Bush's support for immigration reform and the national educational standards known as Common Core.

One in five Republican primary voters said Bush's support of Common Core was a "deal-killer" that would prevent them from supporting him. His support for letting undocumented immigrants remain in the country was a deal-killer for 41 percent.

And the issue may make it hard for Bush to expand his support. Almost half of the Republicans who didn't pick Bush as their first or second choice said his immigration positions were a deal-killer for them.

Still, 14 percent of Republican primary voters named him as their second choice, while no other Republican candidate broke single digits.

Rounding out the rest of potential Republican candidates: Former Arkansas Governor Mike Huckabee and retired neurosurgeon Ben Carson each scored 6 percent; Senator Marco Rubio of Florida was at 5 percent; Louisiana Governor Bobby Jindal, Senator Ted Cruz, and businessman Donald Trump were all at 3 percent; former Senator Rick Santorum of Pennsylvania and Ohio Governor John Kasich had 2 percent; and former Texas Governor Rick Perry and businesswoman Carly Fiorina were both at 1 percent.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Not a single Republican voter named Indiana Governor Mike Pence as first or second choice, the same result as last month's Bloomberg Politics/ Des Moines Register Iowa Poll.

While GOP voters may be ready to support Bush, general-election voters appear more dubious. His unfavorability rating from a sample of 503 general-election voters was 50 percent, compared to 35 percent favorable. Clinton, by contrast, had a 54 percent favorable rating and a 42 percent unfavorable score.

Of the 21 possible Democratic and Republican presidential candidates named, only Trump's unfavorable rating was higher than Bush's, at 66 percent.

More conservative Republicans such as Huckabee and Cruz had lower unfavorable ratings among general-election voters (45 and 33 percent, respectively) than Bush. But nearly all the Republicans were generally viewed unfavorably. Among the party's 15 potential presidential candidates tested, 11 had unfavorable ratings that exceed their favorability, unlike any of the six possible contenders in the Democratic poll. Christie's favorable rating was 40 percent positive, 46 percent negative.

Paul, known for his libertarian leanings, and Kasich had evenly split favorable/unfavorable ratings of 40 percent and 12 percent, respectively. Walker and Carson were the only two Republicans in the poll viewed more favorably than unfavorably by general-election voters. The general-election sample has a margin of error of plus or minus 4.4 percentage points.

The poll suggests that Walker has the most room to grow in New Hampshire. Despite strong showings in recent polls, the Wisconsin governor remains relatively unknown—just 54 percent of GOP primary voters expressed an opinion about him. That opinion was overwhelmingly positive, with those with a favorable view of him outnumbering those with a negative view by better than 4 to 1.

Paul also has reason for optimism. He was second in the Republican poll, the same position he held in November. Paul's favorability rating among Republican primary voters is down three points at 63 percent, but it is the highest among the 15 potential GOP candidates named in the poll.

“Rand Paul, in some ways, is the turtle here while the others are popping up and down,” said Purple Insights' Doug Usher.

Bush’s favorability was 61 percent and Christie’s was 59 percent, up 9 percentage points since November. Still, 29 percent of Republicans said they have an unfavorable view of Christie, tied with Huckabee for second-worst. Trump was the most disliked Republican included in the survey, with 53 percent of Republican primary voters expressing a negative opinion of him.

Like Walker, Rubio is relatively unknown in the state but well-liked among those who had an opinion: 52 percent think favorably of him, while just 14 percent have an unfavorable view.

While there were danger signs for Bush, there were also positives.

Republicans said the former governor would be far better than Walker, Paul, or Christie when it comes to combating terrorism—a top issue for the party's voters—and would be a stronger candidate against Clinton in the general election. By a narrower margin, they also said he would be the best of the four at creating jobs. Paul had a slight advantage when voters were asked who understands people like them, and who had a more positive vision for the future.

“Jeb Bush is out of the gate and in the lead, and those are very good things,” Usher said. “To the extent that he’s banking on some notion of inevitability, I think it’s a disconcerting poll.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Walker's fast rise—he vaulted to the top of the Bloomberg Politics/Des Moines Register Iowa Poll on the strength of his speech at the Iowa Freedom Summit in January—is likely to attract more attention, both from curious voters and from rivals eager to start attacking a frontrunner. He wasn't included in the November poll, but he probably wouldn't have registered much support at that point, Usher said.

"He may be the horse that pops up on the carousel right now," Usher said. "If you take a look at 2012 on the Republican side, there were a whole bunch of horses that popped up and down on the carousel. So his sustainability is impossible to predict at this point."

In New Hampshire, 69 percent of Republican voters said Walker's fight against public-employee unions were either a very or somewhat convincing reason to back him for president. Similar majorities said the same about his three statewide victories in a Democratic-leaning state, and the fact that he is a fresh face who can bring new ideas to Washington.

There are potential pitfalls for Walker, too. Nearly a third of Republican voters said they wouldn't vote for Walker because of the numerous campaign-finance scandals facing him, including one that has been called a "criminal scheme" by prosecutors. Walker has denied wrongdoing and has not been charged with a crime.

About one-fifth said they wouldn't support him because he wouldn't know how to get things done in Washington, while 28 percent cited his lack of foreign policy experience as a reason not to vote for him.

"There's been too many Bushes and Clintons and it's time for change," said Richard Kaufman, a retired professor in Dover, N.H. who participated in the poll. "I'm not necessarily settled on Walker, but I think he's one of the new people.

"At this point," Kaufman said, "I think it's just wait and see who throws their hat into the ring."

Wall Street Journal blog: Washington Wire: "Sen. Paul Criticizes Libya Intervention as 'Hillary's War'"

By Byron Tau

February 7, 2015, 1:46 p.m. EST

MARSHALLTOWN, Iowa—Calling it "Hillary's war," Sen. Rand Paul (R., Ky.) told voters in this politically potent state that the U.S. intervention in Libya has been an "utter disaster" that empowered radical Islamist groups.

Mr. Paul, on a swing through the state that holds the first nominating contest of the presidential election, argued that U.S. foreign policy in Libya, Syria and elsewhere had helped create threats such as Islamic State, among other groups.

Mr. Paul said Hillary Clinton was to blame for what he described as foreign-policy failures, previewing lines of attack for a potential general election match-up. Mrs. Clinton served as secretary of state under President Barack Obama until 2013 and was a proponent of interventions during popular uprisings against the ruling regimes in Libya and Syria.

"Hillary's war in Libya has been an utter disaster," Mr. Paul said Saturday, speaking to a small group of voters and activists. "There are now jihadists roaming all across Libya. It's a jihadist wonderland."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Under Mr. Obama, the U.S. government was part of an international coalition to oust Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi from power in 2011. In Syria, the U.S. has expressed support for the ouster of Bashar al-Assad and has provided both humanitarian and lethal aid to some Syrian opposition groups.

In the aftermath of Mr. Gadhafi's ouster, Islamist groups operating in Libya staged an attack in 2012 on the United States consulate in Benghazi, killing four Americans, including U.S. ambassador Christopher Stevens. Mr. Paul said that Mrs. Clinton had failed to provide adequate security for the U.S. mission to that country which, he said, "should forever preclude her from being considered for the presidency."

A request to Mrs. Clinton for comment on Mr. Paul's remarks wasn't immediately answered.

The administration has reiterated its support for the 2011 intervention in Libya, congratulating the country for holding elections last year. "The United States was proud to support the Libyan people in the darkest days of their revolution and through their efforts to end the Gadhafi regime," Mr. Obama said in a 2014 statement.

Mr. Paul called the former secretary of state the "biggest cheerleader" for intervention in Syria and Libya and said that those policies had empowered radical Islamic groups in both countries.

"Gadhafi was a secular dictator," the senator said. "Not the kind of guy that we want to have representing us in country, but he was secular. He didn't like radical Islam, and he kept them down because they were a threat to him. What happened when we toppled the secular dictator? Chaos. More radical Islam."

In Syria, Mr. Paul said that Islamic State — a militant group operating in Syria and Iraq that is also known as ISIS — was essentially created by the U.S. aid program under the Obama administration.

"I think we have to do something about ISIS, he said. "But, you know why we're doing something and why we have to be there again? Because of a failed foreign policy that got us involved in a Syrian Civil War . . . . By supporting the Islamic rebels, ISIS grew stronger and stronger and stronger. And now we have to go back."

Mr. Paul, a libertarian-leaning senator, has broken sharply with the more hawkish wing of his party, prompting a major foreign policy debate within Republican circles about American military power and the role of the United States in the world.

MSNBC: "Bernie Sanders steps up: I am not Hillary, 'trust me'"

By Alex Seitz-Wald

February 7, 2015, 4:53 p.m. EST

HARRISBURG, Penn. – Organizers with Keystone Progress invited Hillary Clinton, Martin O'Malley, Elizabeth Warren, and Bernie Sanders to speak at the annual conference here this weekend. Sanders showed up.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Independent senator from Vermont is actively considering a presidential run in 2016, and hopes to tap into progressive grassroots networks like this one for a potential underdog challenge to all-but-declared Democratic frontrunner Clinton.

The desire for an alternative to Clinton was clear among the 800 rank-and-file activists, labor organizers, and local elected officials here. But he's stuck between Clinton on one hand and Warren on the other, who so far tops many progressives' fantasy draft presidential ticket.

"Hillary Clinton doesn't come up in our conversations as being a progressive," said Franklin Country Democratic Party Chair Sheri Morgan, who was manning the Progressive Democrats of America booth offering "Run, Bernie, Run" swag.

Sanders himself promised "real differences" with Clinton in an interview with msnbc's Steve Kornacki before his keynote speech Saturday. "Trust me, there will be a real clash of ideas," he said.

Maria Payan, who volunteered for both Obama presidential campaigns, ran up to Sanders as he left the interview and pressed a check into his hand. "I want to help with your campaign anyway I can," she said.

Payan said she likes Warren too, and the idea of woman president, but like others here, preferred Sanders at the top of a progressive dream ticket since she thought Sanders has more experience in government. "People are looking that alternative," she explained

Sanders will need a lot more checks if he hopes to imitate Obama – at least $50 million worth, according to his advisors – but he's been slow to build a fundraising or political operation. Two staffers accompanied Sanders to the event, his Senate communications director and the director of his PAC, and collected names and contact info from supporters.

In the absence of a formal campaign infrastructure, he's found allies in existing local groups, like the the Iowa Citizen Action Network in the key presidential state and Keystone Progress here. Sanders trails Clinton by well over 50 percentage points in early polls, garnering an average of just 3.4% in recent surveys. Warren, who has repeatedly said she is not running for president, has more support at 11%.

And it's still unclear whether Sanders has the stomach for a run. He despises what he calls the "game" aspects of politics, like fundraising and building a personality cult. "What is politics? What is serious politics?" he asked Saturday. "It's about having a serious debate about issues, not gossip, not personality."

Peter Deutsch, a retired Penn State physics professor, also liked the idea of a Sanders-Warren ticket. "To put it bluntly, no one is challenging the establishment, specifically Hillary Clinton," he said.

Inside the ballroom at the Hilton, where Sanders would receive four standing ovations during his speech, Keystone Progress chairman Ritchie Tabachnick called Sanders "the voice of the American conscious."

In his Brooklyn brogue, the senator gave a version of the stump speech he's been testing out on recent visits to Iowa and New Hampshire. It gets gloomy at times. "Now, I know that you think the situation is bad. In fact it's worse than you think," he said.

Nonetheless, the crowd encouraged him to press on when his time is up, whooping at every rhetorical barb against the Koch Brothers, and gasping at statistics about the accumulation of wealth in the top 1%.

Billionaires and "counterrevolutionaries," he explained, have "psychiatric issues" – they're "addicted to money." "We all know people who are addicted to alcohol or drugs; these people are addicted to money," Sanders said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The result is a “philosophical war being waged against the middle-class and working families.”

The solution is a “political revolution,” but one that looks backwards, not forward, to a time when “one person could work 40 hours a week and make enough to take care for the entire family.”

Sanders’ agenda, which he’ll lay out in more detail Monday at the Brookings Institution in Washington, may not be particularly radical, but his rhetoric is, and it’s a message these activists seemed eager to hear.

“I like Bernie Sanders, I think he’s sexy,” said Maggie Henry, an organic farmer who says her Western Pennsylvania business was destroyed by nearby fracking.

Bob Pyle, a pastor in the Brethren Chuck in Snyder, voted for Ron Paul in the Republican primary in both 2008 and 2012, before voting for Obama and in general, said he likes Sanders because he’s anti-establishment and anti-war.

Sanders’ most immediate challenge in presidential politics, however, is not the Koch Brothers, but Warren, who has so far sucked up much of the organizational energy on the left despite giving zero indication that she’s running for president.

Advisors to Sanders think progressives will ultimately come around to Sanders if and when Warren doesn’t run. Michael Morrill, the executive director of Keystone Progress, agreed, “People will coalesce around a progressive candidate, whoever that is.”

But activists hoping to draft Warren don’t have any immediate plans to cease their efforts and throw their support behind Sanders in the event that Warren doesn’t get in. Jim Dean, a fellow Vermonter, warmly introduced Sanders before the keynote address, but he runs a group, Democracy for America, that’s trying to draft Warren. His brother, former Gov. Howard Dean, supports Clinton and hosted a fundraiser for the pro-Clinton super PAC Ready for Hillary last week.

“I’d love for Sanders to run,” Dean said in an interview. But members of his group, which has long branded itself as representing the “Warren-wing of the Democratic party,” voted overwhelming to support Warren in 2016.

Would DFA support Sanders if it becomes clear Warren isn’t running? “We’re not spending a lot of time gaming out what we’re going to do 8 months or whatever from now,” he replied, noting that about as many DFA members voted for Clinton as voted for Sanders.

When Rick Smith started his progressive talk radio show ten years ago, his very first guest was then-Rep. Bernie Sanders. Now, Smith’s show is aired on affiliates on across Pennsylvania, and he says Sanders “has been right about everything” since they first talked.

“Warren says that she’s going to stay out and that’s the right choice,” Smith said. “Bernie is the right guy at the right time.”

But without prompting, Smith continued, “Can he win. Eh.”

Bloomberg View: Albert Hunt: “Obama's Legacy Will Be Set by Foreign Policy”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Albert Hunt

February 8, 2015, 11:11 a.m. EST

There's been a lot of handwringing over whether President Barack Obama's tone and message in the January State of the Union address and last week's budget were too confrontational, dashing hopes for legislative and legacy-bolstering achievements.

The reality: Congressional Republicans and the White House will score a few accomplishments this year because it's in the interests of both sides, regardless of the tone or specific proposals they embrace now.

As for the history books, the final quarter of this presidency -- like most of its predecessors -- will be enhanced or tarnished by foreign policy, an area where Obama has limited control.

There are many opportunities and problems confronting the president, including the prospect of completing the Trans-Pacific Partnership trade pact, which could be central to U.S. economic involvement with Asia. But the big three issues that might keep the president awake at night are Iran, the so-called Islamic State and Russia.

"The president faces geopolitical challenges greater than any in our lifetime," says Fred Kempe, president of the Atlantic Council, an international affairs research organization.

It's impossible to exaggerate the importance and implications of whether a deal is reached this spring to curb Iran's nuclear weapons capacity. "It's the core, centerpiece," says Sandy Berger, the former national security advisor to President Bill Clinton.

If a deal is cut, it almost certainly will be opposed by the Israelis and many members of Congress, including some Democrats. The president will take the issue to the country, and warn that the alternative probably is war. In a private session with Senate Democrats last month, Obama pointedly said that if Congress undercut any agreement he would demand a vote on an "interdiction" of Iran. This president's history of rallying the public isn't very encouraging: Consider, for example, his lack of success on gun control.

There would be other grave consequences to the failure to reach an agreement. It's questionable whether the U.S. could keep together the coalition imposing sanctions on Iran. Faced with the certainty that the Iranians would proceed with the development of nuclear weapons, the Israelis might want to strike if the U.S. doesn't. A war with Iran would make the Iraq conflict seem like a Little League game.

Regarding the Islamic State, there have been mildly encouraging developments. Kurds retook the city of Kobani; the U.S. airstrikes have taken a toll, and some funding from black market oil has been eliminated. But, Richard Perle, a prominent neoconservative national security expert, says the picture remains bleak.

"They still are running a territory the size of England and France put together and with any victories they achieve, there may be Muslims all over the world wildly inspired by them and creating problems in as many as 30 countries," he said.

With less than two years left in office, it would be virtually impossible for the administration to achieve the objective, enunciated by Defense Secretary-designate Ashton Carter, of a "lasting defeat" of the Islamic State.

The best case is that by the end of this administration the few Arab nations in the anti-Islamic State coalition have held together, and aren't torn apart by the Sunni-Shiite schism. In addition, the U.S. could intensify the strikes, possibly with a small group of advisers on the ground. If the enemy is in retreat, that would be an accomplishment.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On Russia, President Vladimir Putin is showing no sign of backing down in Ukraine, despite biting economic sanctions. And, he's threatening to put pressure on Moldova and Azerbaijan. The need is to contain him on Ukraine and deter him elsewhere.

If oil prices remain at low levels, some American strategists speculate that economic conditions will pinch Putin so hard that he'll need to seek relief. But the pressure could also push him to be more bellicose. Moreover, Ukraine is an even worse economic basket case than Russia, probably requiring tens of billions in assistance.

There are two widely divergent views of how all this could play out. The American exceptionalists say Obama is too passive, and the next president, whether Hillary Clinton or a Republican, will have a better appreciation of the need for U.S. global leadership and push a more assertive foreign policy.

The other view is that America's days as a global empire are numbered. In a new book, "America in the Shadow of Empires," the political scientist David Coates argues that the U.S. is overextended militarily, imposing an additional burden on a fraying domestic economy and that a "measured and moderate" rollback of foreign entanglements is essential.

Obama's final two years will be about trying to find a path between those two positions.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· February 24 – Santa Clara, CA: Sec. Clinton to Keynote Address at Inaugural Watermark Conference for Women (PR Newswire)

· March 3 – Washington, DC: Sec. Clinton honored by EMILY's List (AP)

· March 4 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton to fundraise for the Clinton Foundation (WSJ)

· March 16 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton to keynote Irish American Hall of Fame (NYT)

· March 19 – Atlantic City, NJ: Sec. Clinton keynotes American Camp Association conference (PR Newswire)

· March 23 – Washington, DC: Sec. Clinton to keynote award ceremony for the Toner Prize for Excellence in Political Reporting (Syracuse)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara DuBois" <sara@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 8/14/2008 12:33:53 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Tracking Update: McCain Speech in Aspen, CO 08/14/08

Hello All,
Unfortunately, our tracker was not allowed into this ticketed event. But good news: we were able to capture most of the event via online streaming video. Below are the notes from our effort.

Big Highlights

- Flubs price a gallon for gas, corrects himself, saying $5/gallon, says that's the classic liberal response: go after the rich.
- Exclaims that Social Security "isn't that complicated!" Medicare is complicated
- Responds he still wants to close Gitmo, b/c what's our moral authority if we torture prisoners (at Abu Ghraib)
- Denies he said SCOTUS Gitmo decision was worst in history, then says he's given to hyperbole, SCOTUS was frustrated we hadn't moved forward w/ cases
- Mentions next to Fermi plant he visited was a pool of spent nuclear fuel, so we have to reprocess b/c that's a natl security issue
- Says his belief in global warming is a big difference between him and his friends on the Right, "but it's not the only difference"

Aspen, CO: McCain Speech at Aspen Institute 08/14/08

(Disclaimer: The following are notes, not direct quotes. If you'd like a quotable transcript or video of any part below, please email us.)

Background Details

- John Thune, Phil Gramm, John Huntsman in audience; also Cindy
- Walter Isaacson gives intro remarks and then begins asking questions
- Tight security (secret service and police): only ppl w/ tickets or credentialed press allowed in
    - event was sold out
- Tracker denied entrance for fourth day in a row

Speech Highlights

- 1Q) ISAACSON:: What was turning point?
    - MCCAIN: Lindsay Graham and I were asked to attend ceremony in Baghdad--
    - ISAACSON:: Lindsay has decided to walk in late.
    - MCCAIN: He's been bane of my existence. Good news is he's col. in USAF, bad news is he's a lawyer.
    - Anyway, we attended this ceremony Petraeus asked us to attend and it was great. Lindsay Graham and I decided we can't give up on this surge even though it'd be unpopular - a lot of ppl thought we were losing this war or we'd lost. We started No Surrender tour, drawing crowds as big as 15 ppl and That was kind of a turning point. And when labor day was over, we had a debate in NH, and I didn't do well in most of the debates but I did well in that one -- Mo Udall joke [Manchester] -- The turning pt was that event in Baghdad b/c it puts things in right perspective when you see young Americans fight for someone else's frdm.

- 2Q) ISAACSON:: You say the surge is won. Define success now.
    - MCCAIN: It depends on what goes on. We're a bit disappointed --w/ them it's 2 steps forward, 1 step back -- we thought they'd set a date for election --they've been copying our Cong by taking a vacation w/o setting date for provincial elections - a lot of that has to do w/ Kirkuk. I'm happy Maliki has basically taken charge of his govt. And a guy a yr ago we would've described as a weak leader is now taking charge. Low casualty rate, the neighborhoods are safe. There will be no parades in NYC or peace signing on USS Missouri. But our troops will come home w/ victory and honor.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- 3Q) ISAACSON: Define victory.
    - 1) functioning government 2) effective judicial system 3) legitimate elections
    - A judicial system that is far more effective than today - that's an area where progress still need to be made. We can have victories every day but until ppl feel they have recourse in a court of law, it's not democracy.
    - Lindsay Graham went over there as a lawyer, not a Sen, to help them set up judic. Rule of law is critical. Economic progress -- oil is a curse and a blessing. 'The classic success of a counter-insurgency operation.The strategy has succeeded. I would rely on the commander who has succeeded. Petraeus is brilliant but he didn't invent this, it's an old strategy. You clear, you hold, adn then the rest of it follows as night follows day.' We still got Iranians with these special groups coming in. We've still got the most lethal explosives coming in from Iran. We've still got suicide bombers coming in from Syrian borders. Question is when we leave and how quickly--not when we leave, but when and how quickly. And I will leave a lot of that to the General who's made great decisions, Petraeus and Odierno. And a lot of responsibilty lies in POTUS.

- 4Q) ISAACSON:: Russia said they wouldn't respect Georgian borders.
    - If you're talking about military ops, I don't think that's a viability. This act of aggression [from Russia] is worse than anything Georgia did to South Ossetia. We've reached a critical point since post-Cold War. A reassertion of age-old Russian ambitions. It wasnt an accident that 5 nations flew to Tbilisi to show solidarity with Mishe. They all have in common living under Russian domination. Putin has displayed this kind of behaviour in a # of ways. Litishvenko, Czech pipeline, bullying Georgia, attempts to reassert influence in Ukraine. Ukraine is nervous, esp since Ukr. and Georgia not part of NATO

- 5Q) ISAACSON: Should we fast-track them into NATO?
    - I think we should take up their 'map' and move quickly. Will the other members of NATO agree? I hope they will. This isn't just groups of ppl looting, killing, and on a rampage in Georgian countryside. There's no place for this in 21st century. Putin, though PM, is clearly running things in Russia. Our first goal is to get the Russians and the so-called 'citizens' withdrawn from Georgian territory. This is a brave little territory. They were early to adopt Christianity. They broke away from USSR. US-educated man orchestrated the Rose Revolution. They had a free society, and now they live in terror. One of the old strategies is to inspire terror in a population. A lot oat stake for the future of the 21st cent. I talk to Mische every day.

- 6Q) ISAACSON: If they try to overthrow, should we step in?
    - MCCAIN: I think our focus now has to be not to try to escalate this into a military operation. We need to diffuse it. There was a provision added to the ceasefire taht the Georgians strongly objected to that Russians interpreted as being able to stay in Georgia for a very long time. Words matter!

- 7Q) ISAACSON:: Still in favor from evicting them from g8 and WTO?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Those are all options we have to consider. We havent worked closely enough with our allies. Lets work collectively. Let's convene Natl Council, OSE, and come up with a solution. Let's not talk military now b/c that would escalate. There's plenty of time in the future depending on Russ behavior to talk about other options.
- This is a compelling argument to become indep of foreign oil. The pipeline that has been cut off is part of world's oil supply. And while not directly for us, it's importnat. And prices has gone up. We need Lexington project - it's vital to become indep of foreingn oil. Flubs price a gallon for gas (either says $3 or $9). [audience laughs] -- sorry $5 / gallon - that's the classic liberal response: go after the rich.

- 8Q) ISAACSON: Does that mean domestic drilling and shale oil?
  - MCCAIN: All of the above. Find out what works and what doesnt. WE've made dramatic advancement in solar panels. Let a 1000 flowers bloom here. Oil shale - that's fine with me. What's the fastest way and easiest way. Clean Coal
-
- 9Q) ISAACSON: And nuclear?
  - We can create 45plants and 700k jobs. But we're going to need more plants than that. And coal - we sit on large supply of coal. And of course nuclear power - the French. they reprocess. Adn teh Brits are going to, and the Japanese. And we couldve had it not been for Carter. I also recently visited Fermi plant in MI, and they're very efficient. And next to it is a pool of spent nuclear pool. And that's a great risk. So we've got to reprocess b/c its a security issue.

- 10Q) ISAACSON: Friedman mentioned you hadnt supported tax breaks for wind and solar. Do you and iwll you?
  - I have and I have a long record of supporting. In AZ, we have sun every day. In fact, we have no water. I've always been for all of those, and I havent missed any crucial vote. But AZ citizens know I have to be out campaigning.

- 11Q) WI: And youre for extending for solar and wind?
  - Yes. And I think tax breaks should be made permanent. And 1yr depreciation for alt. fuels. And cars - MI is hurting b/c of auto industry. The Volt technology can lead America back to predominance. They've had massive layoffs, but now they've made agrmts b/t labor/management on health care and pensions, they can move forwar.d

- 12Q) ISAACSON: Still for cap and trade even though youre for coal?
  - Yes. GE has committed themselves to green technologies and it's successful. America can lead the world in that.
  - Global warming is real. That's where i have a great difference w/ some of my friends on teh Right - that's not my only difference with them.
  - And I oppo'd ethanol subsidies - I told Iowa that. I lost Iowa. We went to state fair.
  - My friend, John Thune is here. Many of you know him. I've often said if I looked like Thune I'd be POTUS today. We were in Sturgis, SD the other day. About 3500 ppl in Sturgis and there were thousands of bikers there. It was a great experience. I recommend it.

- 13Q) ISAACSON: Why did teh Doha trade round fail and who's at fault?
  - MCCAIN Our farm bill was a contributor. When you look at the giveaways, it's clear it's not in keeping with parameters of free trade. Gov. Huntsman is here and he's very well-versed in this area.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- And I think he agrees with me that farm bills/subisdies were major factor. But also India and China were significant factor. They have inexpensive products and sometimes higher technology and they saw no upside to DOHA. Is it end of world? No. But it should be a spur to approve other agrmts, e.g. Colombia. And what about free trade agrmt w/ EU and then see what labor and enviro standards have to be cuz theirs are higher than ours

- 14Q) ISAACSON: should we ahve labor/enviro standards?
  - We should have some. And stricter penalties and faster process for violations. But 1 of purposes of free trade is lift economies and better lives of other countries. We're not ok w/ child labor, etc, but. E.g. Colombia exports here w/o tariff but we pay going out. And what msg does it send to S America? If we ignore the lessons of history, e.g. Smoot-Hauley or raising tariffs during recession, then the rest of that slogan is obvious. we need to approve more agrmts. There's a happy medium b/t standards but not too high.

- 15Q) ISAACSON: In favor of increasing strength of dollar?
  - If there's a bright spot in this dismal pic, that I think that it's very clear that energy independence is a key factor. But if there's a bright spot, it's exports - they'll contribute to a better economy over time. I understand Steve Forbes thinks we need to strengthen dollar, so I'm for it, but I think we need to have eocnomic conditions in place to support it.

- 16Q) ISAACSON:: Still in favor of closing Gitmo?
  - Yes I am. Life is full of anecdotes, sometimes too many and sometimes not descriptive of reality but this one is. Lindsay Graham and I were in IRaq, visited one of largest prisons, adn we met w/ former high-ranking member of AQ who had come over to our side but was being held. I asked how did you, AQ, succeed and do so well after USA had done such a good job militarily. He said, (1) the total chaos in Iraq drove ppl to our side, adn (2) Abu Gharib was the major recruiting tool. Whats the moral authority of US if we torture prisoners? So I'm for closing ABu Gharib.

- 17Q) ISAACSON:: Whyd you come out against SCOTUS decision?
  - JM: We already had a process in place, which kept with the traditions of the Nuremberg trials. He shouldve spent more time in prison. But the accused was able to seek counsel adn see evidence but he wasn't read Miranda rights. Adn there's a precedent: Nuremburg. They're given a trial, etc. but they're not citizens and they dont get everything. SCOTUS said they deserve

- 18Q) ISAACSON:: But you called it the worst decision in history.
  - No i didnt. sometimes im given to hyperbole. The court was frustrated that we hadn't moved fwd w/ large # of cases. That ppl had been sitting in prison for 5, 6 yrs. I hope we can show courts that by moving fwd. But I don't think they deserve rts of American citizens.

- 19Q) ISAACSON: Social Security's anniversary. You called Social Security funding mechanism a disgrace. How would you change it?
  - It's a pay as you go system. There will come a point, not today, where there's more $ going out than coming in. That's not fair. Cong approval is at 9%, it's at a gridlock on everything. 1 of our earliest memories is Reagan-O'neill 1983 fixing Social Security- it may not have been the solution that I wanted, or Phil or Jack or anyone else, but we saved Social Security for 30 yrs. Why can't we do that again? It isn't that complicated! Medicare is complicated, not Social Security -- theres been studies.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- 20Q) ISAACSON: Should it be like energy - we do a little bit of everything.
    - I am opposed to tax increases, I will fix without it. I will convince ppl that we do not need tax increases. [applause]

- 21Q) ISAACSON:: Does that mean tax increases are on the table?
    - I have to be against tax increases as you know. just as ppl go in with positions.

- 22Q) ISAACSON:: You were asked to name your top 10 songs. And #1 was ABBA's "Dancing Queen"?
    - I think #1 was Sinatra.
- Well then they did something to you.
    - If there's anything I'm lacking in, it's taste in music and art and the good things in life. A lot of my taste in music stopped when I crashed my plane and never restarted. Everyone says they hate ABBA - why do they go to Mamma Mia?

[feed cuts out]

--
Sara DuBois
Tracking / Communications Manager
ProgressiveAccountability.org sara@progressiveaccountability.org
202-609-7681 (office)
410-967-7306 (cell)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Kelli Farr" <kfarr@progressivemediausa.org>
To: "Kelli Farr" <KFarr@progressivemediausa.org>
Date: 6/6/2008 5:00:21 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Morning 06/08/08

Main Topics: McCan't rally GOP, McBomb Iran, McCain visits Florida, town halls will cause more gaffes from McCain

Summary of Shift:
Barack Obama's private meeting with Hillary Clinton topped the news this morning. Obama's traveling pres s apparently felt slighted about the meeting as they did not learn about the meeting until they were 'locked i n the plane' without the candidate. Ed McMahon's ensuing home foreclosure spent a significant amount of time in the spotlight. On the day after the anniversary of his tragic death, news stations continued their com memoration of RFK's life and legacy, including interviews and entire segments on both FNC and CNN. Fox News continued to place more emphasis than any other network on McCain's attempt to seduce Hillary vot ers although CNN did mention recent web activism to recruit former HRC supporters to the McCain camp. Two Air Force generals were ousted after inquiries found systemic problems amidst mishandling of nuclear components and weapons. Senate republicans blocked a global warming bill over a dispute on its costs.

Highlights:
1) McCain's inability to rally the GOP
a. Novak: Republican activists sitting on the sidelines, no enthusiasm for McCain
b. Glenn Beck complains that conservatives have no candidate this cycle
2) Joint town halls with Obama could lead to more outrageous remarks from McCain
3) John Stewart judges McCain's AIPAC performances as the finest
4) McCain's voting record is a concern in Florida
5) New unemployment numbers: 5.5% rate; 49, 00 jobs lost in May [no clip]
6) Harry Reid appears on CNN, claims McCain is wrong on war and economy; does not tie him to Bush [nc]
7) CNN repeatedly plays sound byte of McCain's vow to keep a respectful campaign that keeps race out of the spotlight [nc]

Clips:
Highlight #1
Robert Novak Gives McCain an E for Effort on Uniting GOP Base (FNC 06/06/08 6:23am)
BRIAN KILMEADE: [...] did John McCain make the most of the time he had by himself? While the democrats fought it out did McCain plow the ground and set the ground to be successful?

ROBERT NOVAK: I don't think he did. I don't think he secured the republican base. He tried hard, but he didn't make it. I have never seen less enthusiasm among the republican activists up and down the line; all kind—social conservatives, economic conservatives, think tanks, whatever.

What's amazing is this is the only shot the republicans have this year. They can forget about congress. They should concentrate on the president but the enthusiasm is not there yet.

Glenn Beck: Conservatives Don't Really Have a Candidate this Year (CNN 06/06/08 7:55am)
GLENN BECK: [...] we don't have a candidate. Conservatives don't really feel like they have a candidate. You know, as much as John McCain says he's not gonna raise taxes—he is gonna raise taxes. It's called cap and trade.

It'll be the largest tax increase the country has ever seen and it is a hidden tax. It'll make your gas go up, according to the EPA by $1.50/gallon. Obama is for it. Hillary's for it. John McCain is for it.

JOHN ROBERTS: Glenn, you haven't warmed up to John McCain at all?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BECK: No. Not really. [...] I'm not a guy who votes against somebody. I wanna find a guy that I can vote for. I spent an hour with Bob Barr that's gonna air on CNN Headline News tonight. [...] He's better, I guess than the other two but I'm not passionate about anybody and I don't know any conservatives that are. Conservatives have really—conservatives have left the Republican Party.

ROBERTS: What'd you think about McCain's speech on Tuesday night?

BECK: You know what? I couldn't get past the green background

[off-stage laughter]

BECK: I'm sorry, but I can't get past the fact that we just left the coolest month of May that we've had in I don't know how many years. Scientists are now saying we're on a 15 year hiatus. Up in Iceland, they saw the first polar bear in Iceland that has ever been or has been in twenty years and the police shot him last night and here we are talking about cap and trade when everyone, we have China off the coast of Key West, drilling. We have 40 new coal fire plants being built in Europe and we can't get our own resources. It's insanity.

[Beck then goes on to explain that he fears for his job under an Obama administration, citing the fairness doctrine.]

BECK: [...] The thing with John McCain is they do look—I mean, age is a huge difference between the two. One looks young and energetic, the other does not look young and energetic [...]. Me personally, I don't think that we got a candidate here that we can be happy about [...].

Highlight #2
CNN Reminds Viewers of McCain's Most Controversial Remarks (CNN 06/0608 6:21am)
FRANK SESNO: [...] McCain wants a rerun of his town halls from the primary season. They've been good to him.

[McCain clip on Osama Bin Laden]

SESNO: They've allowed him to highlight experience, grit and policy, to show off his humor.

MCCAIN: We have so little water in Arizona the trees chase the dogs.

SESNO: He's better off the cuff than in a speech but this could be risky business too. One-hundred years in Iraq: that was a town hall moment.

[100 years clip]

SESNO: Remember this one?

[Bomb Iran to the tune of "Barbara Ann" clip]

SESNO: What if he does that on stage with Obama? If Obama doesn't pounce, surely the pundits and bloggers will.

Highlight #3
On Daily Show McCain Wins Florida for AIPAC Performance (CC 06/05/08 11:23pm)
JOHN MCCAIN: Not too long ago I was in Jerusalem with Senator Lieberman.

JOHN STEWART: You win, Senator, but when you go to Israel you don't need to bring your own Jew.

Highlight #4
McCain's Voting Record is a Concern in Florida (ABC 06/06/08 6:07am)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SUZANNE KENNEDY: John McCain does plan to tour Florida's everglades today. Yesterday he was in Buena Vista Florida. He is getting some criticism for opposing two big priorities in Florida, which may be a key state this fall. McCain voted against an everglades restoration bill and a National Hurricane Insurance fund. Obama supported both. McCain says the everglades measure was part of a pork barrel spending bill.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jacob Roberts" <jacob@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 7/27/2008 7:14:21 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Sunday 07/27/08

Main Topics: McCain interviews with Wolf Blitzer and George Stephanopoulos, McCain has a bad week

Summary of Shift: Pundits this morning frequently debated the criticism McCain leveled against the press for this week's Obama coverage. Nearly all news personalities agreed that McCain's goading of Obama into an Iraq visit turned on the republican candidate. A new NBC poll shows Americans find McCain to be the least risky presidential choice this year. A man shot seven at a church in TN.

Highlights:
1) Interviews
   a. ABC: Stephanopoulos interviews McCain
   b. CNN: Entire McCain interview airs on Late Edition
2) McCain's bumpy week
   a. CBS: Hagel and Reed both deem McCain's tactics in poor taste
   b. MSNBC: Panelist dubs McCain 'Mayor McCheese'

No clips:
1) CNN: US Ambassador: Insurgency has declined; no longer a threat but still does not proclaim victory
2) ABC: Colby King says, 'John McCain taunted Obama for not visiting Iraq for many years' and the conservatives 'have a bland candidate'
3) CNN: w/r/t Couric interview edit ('CBS' McCain Mashup') Steve Roberts says, 'I would use this as a case study of what not to do' in his George Washington University ethics class
4) CNN: Howard Kurtz and his panel on Reliable Sources review McCain's week of gaffes, concluding they were due to campaign fatigue

Clips w/ Labels and Transcriptions:
Highlight#1
ABC's George Stephanopoulos Sits Down with John McCain (ABC 07/27/08 9:06am)
GEORGE STEPHANOPOULOS, ABC NEWS: Senator Obama was in London this morning, and he was responding to your comments from yesterday when you said that 16 months might be a pretty good timetable in Iraq.

He said, "We're pleased to see that there's been some convergence around proposals we've been making for a year-and-a-half."

SEN JOHN MCCAIN: That's really good. Look, it's not a timetable, as I said. I was asked, how does that sound? Anything sounds good to me, but…

STEPHANOPOULOS: But you never used the word before.

MCCAIN: … you know, the point is…

STEPHANOPOULOS: You made a point of never using…

MCCAIN: … I never…

STEPHANOPOULOS: … the word before.

MCCAIN: Look, I have always said, and I said then, it's the conditions on the ground. If Senator Obama had had his way, we'd have been out last March, and we'd been out in defeat and chaos, and probably had to come back again because of Iranian influence.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It's conditions on the ground — the way that the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff said, the way that General Petraeus has said — conditions on the ground, so that the Iraqi government can have control, can have the sufficient security, so that we don't have to come back. Senator Obama said that if his date didn't work, we may have to come back.

We're not coming home in victory. We're coming home in victory.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But it does seem…

MCCAIN: But it is a — it is not a date. I want to make it very clear to you, it is not a date. It's conditions on the ground.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So, you shouldn't have used the word timetable.

MCCAIN: Pardon me?

STEPHANOPOULOS: You shouldn't have used the word timetable.

MCCAIN: I didn't use the word timetable. That I did — if I did…

STEPHANOPOULOS: Well, it's a pretty good timetable.

MCCAIN: Oh, well, look. Anything is a good timetable that is dictated by conditions on the ground. Anything is good.

But the timetable is dictated, not by a artificial date, but by the conditions on the ground, the conditions of security.

And by the way, our ambassador to Iraq basically said we have succeeded. We have succeeded in this strategy.

Now, look. Senator Obama doesn't understand. He doesn't understand what's at stake here. And he chose to take a political path that would have helped him get the nomination of his party.

I took a path that I knew was unpopular, because I knew we had to win in Iraq. And we are winning in Iraq.

And if we'd done what Senator Obama wanted done, it would have been chaos, genocide, increased Iranian influence, perhaps al Qaeda establishing a base again.

Now we have a stable ally in the region, and it is not based on any date.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But it does seem like…

MCCAIN: I like six months, three months, two months. I like yesterday. I like yesterday, OK? That seems really good to me. But the fact is, the conditions on the ground…

STEPHANOPOULOS: But what's the difference between…

MCCAIN: … have not dictated it.

STEPHANOPOULOS: … your positions now? He says, OK, here's the timetable I want. That's the mission.

MCCAIN: Yes.

STEPHANOPOULOS: If the commanders come and tell me the conditions have changed dramatically, if Iraq's going to be unstable, I'll take that into account.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

You also say, timetable sounds great, but it's on the conditions on the ground.

MCCAIN: Senator Obama said that he would come out no matter what. He said that he would be out — according to his original plan, it would have been last March. He says that the surge has not worked. He said it couldn't work.

There's a fundamental difference between myself and Senator Obama. And now that it's the general election coming up, I can see why he and his people are trying to blur that distinction.

When the decision had to be made whether to adopt the strategy of the surge, he said it wouldn't work, it would increase sectarian violence. He said all those things that made it acceptable to the left of his party.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But there was a fundamental difference about the original decision to go to war. He said it would inflame the Muslim world, it would become a recruitment tool for al Qaeda.

You said, and you wrote, that it would lessen antipathy in the Muslim world, and that we'd be greeted as liberators.

Wasn't Senator Obama right about that?

MCCAIN: I don't believe so. We were greeted as liberators. We mishandled the war for nearly four years. We mishandled it in a way that was so harmful that I stood up against it. I said it wouldn't work. I said we had to have a new strategy, and I was criticized for being disloyal — disloyal to Republicans.

STEPHANOPOULOS: You also said many times that the strategy was the right strategy.

MCCAIN: I said that Saddam Hussein caused a — imposed a threat to the United States of America and our security. And the Oil for Food scandal, the $12 billion he was skimming, the fact that he had said that he had in operation and he wanted to have weapons of mass destruction, the fact that this society that he ruled in such a brutal fashion was really awful. And he did pose a long-term threat to the security of the United States of America.

But that's a job for the historians.

When the crucial time came as to whether we were going to leave Iraq and lose, or stay and do the very unpopular thing of 30,000 additional troops — asking young Americans to make the sacrifice — he was wrong, I was right. That was the crucial point…

STEPHANOPOULOS: And you don't…

MCCAIN: … in the strategy.

STEPHANOPOULOS: … accept that he was right and you were wrong…

MCCAIN: Of course not.

STEPHANOPOULOS: … on the original decision.

MCCAIN: Of course not. Of course not.

STEPHANOPOULOS: You've also taken some heat this week with your comments saying that Senator Obama would rather lose…

MCCAIN: Yes.

STEPHANOPOULOS: … a war than win a political campaign.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MCCAIN: Yes.

STEPHANOPOULOS: I can't believe you believe that.

MCCAIN: Well, I'm not questioning his patriotism. I'm questioning his actions. I'm questioning his lack, total lack, of understanding. His…

STEPHANOPOULOS: But that is questioning his total…

MCCAIN: I…

STEPHANOPOULOS: When you say someone would rather lose a war, a candidate, that's questioning his honor, his decency, his character.

MCCAIN: All I'm saying is — and I will repeat — he does not understand. I'm not questioning his patriotism. I am saying that he made the decision, which was political, in order to help him get the nomination of his party.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So, putting lives at risk for a political campaign — you believe he's doing that.

MCCAIN: I believe that, when he said that we had to leave Iraq, and we had to be out by last March, and we had to have a date certain, that was in contravention to — and still is — the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, General David Petraeus.

When he never asked to sit down for a briefing with General Petraeus, our commander on the ground, when he waited 900 days to go back again, where young American lives are on the line, I think that's a fundamental lack of understanding. And I think the American people will make the appropriate choice.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But you're questioning his motives.

MCCAIN: I say that it was very clear that a decision had to made. And I made it when it wasn't popular. He made a decision which was popular with his base. And that is a fundamental difference.

And he does not understand, and did not understand and still doesn't understand, that the surge was the vital strategy in us not having to lose a war.

Chaos, genocide, increased influence of Iranians in the region. The consequences of failure would have been severe.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But…

MCCAIN: Now, the benefits are enormous of a stable ally in the region, of a country that is a friend of ours, a brake on Iranian influence — certainly a brake on al Qaeda and other jihadist organizations.

So, he made the decision that that was the best way to go to get the nomination of his party.

STEPHANOPOULOS: There's also been a flap about Senator Obama's decision in Germany not to visit the troops at Landstuhl. He now says that, based on what he was hearing from the Pentagon, there was no way that wouldn't be seen as a political trip, which is why he decided not to go.

Do you accept that explanation?

MCCAIN: Well, I know this, that those troops would have loved to have seen him. And I know of no Pentagon regulation that would have prevented him from going there — without the media and the press and all of the associated people — nothing that I know of would have kept him from visiting those wounded troops. And they are gravely wounded, many of them.

STEPHANOPOULOS: He's done it many times in the past.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MCCAIN: In Landstuhl, Germany, when I went through, I visited — I visited the hospital. But the important thing is that, if I had been told by the Pentagon that I couldn't visit those troops, and I was there and wanted to be there, I guarantee you, there would have been a seismic event.

And so, I believe he had the opportunity to go without the media. And I'll let the facts speak for themselves.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So, this is…

MCCAIN: It certainly wasn't the Pentagon…

STEPHANOPOULOS: … (inaudible) campaign (ph).

MCCAIN: That's certainly what the Pentagon spokesman said. There was nothing to prevent him from going, if he went without the press and the media and his campaign people.

But we'll see what happens.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Fair game?

MCCAIN: Well, I think people make a judgment by what we do and what we don't do. He certainly found time to do other things.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Let's talk about the economy.

President Bush in — and adding some unvarnished talk recently about the economy when he didn't think the cameras were on. I think he said, "Wall Street got drunk, and now we're going through the hangover."

I know you don't want to use language like that, but is his basic take right? Is Wall Street the villain here? And what would you do about it?

MCCAIN: I think that Wall Street is the villain in the things that happened in the subprime lending crisis and other areas where investigations and possible prosecution is going on.

But I also think that Congress is at fault. We didn't restrain spending. Spending got completely out of control. We were …

STEPHANOPOULOS: But what does that have to do with the mortgage crisis…

MCCAIN: It increases…

STEPHANOPOULOS: … or with the housing crisis?

MCCAIN: It increases the deficit. We didn't address the energy crisis, which has been building for 30 years. We're now sending $700 billion of Americans' money overseas to countries that don't like us very much.

So, I think there's a lot of blame to go around here. But I also would blame a gridlocked Congress, which is gridlocked as we speak, when we should be doing offshore drilling.

STEPHANOPOULOS: The gridlock…

MCCAIN: We should be moving forward with nuclear power.

STEPHANOPOULOS: The gridlock broke today on the housing bill. It passed, I think, 72 to 13 in the Senate.

I know you couldn't be there. Would you have voted for that bill?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MCCAIN: Yes. But I also see, again, the influence of special interests. They place the responsibilities for trying to help solve some of these problems of people remaining in their homes — and it is real and significant — in the hands of the lenders.

I would have liked to have seen the homeowner, the primary residents, go down and get the 30-year FHA guaranteed loan at the new value of their home, and put it in the hands of the borrower, the homeowner. But I'll support…

STEPHANOPOULOS: Then why vote for the bill?

MCCAIN: Because it's better than nothing. It's better than — it may give relief to several hundred thousand homeowners. Or if it gives relief to one, it's a — but I think it can provide some relief.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Several of your colleagues look at this bill and say it could put the taxpayers on the hook for up to $25 billion for Fannie Mae.

They look at the government stepping in to help Bear Stearns and they say, this is socialized capitalism. You know, what we have is that the private companies get to make all the profits. When they get in trouble, the government steps in.

Is that right?

MCCAIN: No, it's not right. But we reached such a situation that, if these institutions failed, the impact on millions of innocent Americans could be very severe.

In the case of Fannie and Freddie, we should stop their lobbying activities. We should eliminate the pay and bonuses that these people rake in…

STEPHANOPOULOS: George Will has an idea on that.

MCCAIN: … the most…

STEPHANOPOULOS: He says that when some places like Freddie Mae (ph) or Fannie Mae or Bear Stearns get the government guarantee, that the executives that work there should get a government salary.

MCCAIN: Sure. That's exactly right. And we could go out and ask people — the smartest people in America, maybe somebody like Jack Welch or John Chambers or Meg Whitman, people like that — and say, come and take over and do it for $1 a year. They'd be willing to do that.

But the other thing is, the shareholders should not be the first ones to be paid. There should be new preferred stock issued. And those people would be, and the government, paid off first, since the government is on the hook.

STEPHANOPOULOS: And should the government get some stock, so that if Fannie Mae does recover, the taxpayers should benefit?

MCCAIN: Absolutely. Absolutely, they should, in my view. And we've got to send the signal that, over time, that these kinds of institutions have not helped the American homeowner. They've basically helped enrich a lot of people that otherwise shouldn't have been.

STEPHANOPOULOS: A majority of Americans think you're going to come in. They look at your tax plans and say you're going to be just like President Bush on the economy.

What would you do right now — spending aside — that would be different from what President Bush is doing?

MCCAIN: Well, I would give every family in America double their exemption for — on the child tax and children's tax, a dependent tax break, from $3,500 to $7,000.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I would declare that we will scrub every agency of government and eliminate those that are not necessary.

I will veto every single pork barrel bill that comes across my desk, and make them famous.

I will promise that we will not only keep tax cuts low, but we will have some additional incentives for American investment and growth of jobs.

I will embark on an immediate, an immediate effort to eliminate our dependence on foreign oil — nuclear power, offshore drilling, wind, tide, solar — and stop this drain of $700 billion a year from the American economy. This administration — for 30 years, Congress and the administrations have not done anything on this energy crisis. Now, it's hurting low-income Americans the most.

There are many steps that can be taken absolutely, including the gas tax holiday. Everybody — everybody…

STEPHANOPOULOS: Not a single economist in the country said it'd work.

MCCAIN: Yes. And there's no economist in the country that knows very well the low-income American who drives the furthest, in the oldest automobile, that sometimes can't even afford to go to work.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But they all say that that's…

MCCAIN: And they haven't met…

STEPHANOPOULOS: … not who's (ph) going to get the benefit. The oil companies, the gas companies are going to absorb…

MCCAIN: You know, they..

STEPHANOPOULOS: … any reduction.

MCCAIN: … they say that. But one, it didn't happen before, and two, we wouldn't let it happen. We wouldn't let it — Americans wouldn't let them absorb that.

STEPHANOPOULOS: How would you prevent that?

MCCAIN: We would make them shamed into it. We, of course, know how to — American public opinion. And we would penalize them, if necessary. But they wouldn't. They would pass it on.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Let me ask you about…

MCCAIN: But let me just finally say, Americans need trust and confidence in their government.

The most important thing I would do, the most important of all, is what I have done all the years I've been in the Congress. I'd reach across the aisle to the Democrats, and I'd say, "Let's go work together."

MCCAIN: I've worked with — it's not a fact that I would do something new. I've worked with Joe Lieberman, Ted Kennedy, Russ Feingold, Byron Dorgan — you go down the list — Carl Levin, Fritz Hollings.

Look down the list of the bipartisan legislation and action that I've done together. I could do that much, much more effectively as president of the United States.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Social Security. You're a longtime supporter of the private accounts, as President Bush called for them.

MCCAIN: I am a supporter of sitting down together and putting everything on the table and coming up with an answer. So, there is nothing I would take off the table. There was nothing I would demand.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I think that's the way that Ronald Reagan and Tip O'Neill did it. And that's what we have to do again.

STEPHANOPOULOS: In the past you said there was essentially — and you told the "Wall Street Journal"…

MCCAIN: No, I have said and will say, I will say that everything has to be on the table, if we're going to reach a bipartisan agreement. I've been in bipartisan negotiations before. I know how you reach a conclusion. We all have to sit down together with everything on the table.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So, that means payroll tax increases are on the table, as well?

MCCAIN: There is nothing that's off the table. I have my positions, and I'll articulate them. But nothing's off the table.

I don't want tax increases. Of course I'd like to have young Americans have some of their money put into an account with their name on it. But that doesn't mean that anything is off the table…

STEPHANOPOULOS: With (ph) their payroll taxes diverted into accounts.

MCCAIN: I say that everything is on the table that has to be on the table, the way Tip O'Neill and Ronald Reagan did. STEPHANOPOULOS: Let me ask you about your position to exclude Russia from the G-8. How are you going to get that done? Every other G-8 nation is against it.

MCCAIN: Well, you have to take positions whether other nations agree or not, because you have to do what's best for America…

STEPHANOPOULOS: You've got some visitors here.

MCCAIN: … and the world. That's Sam.

Look at Russia's actions in the last week or so. He'll get out of here.

STEPHANOPOULOS: He'll get out. It'll be fine.

MCCAIN: In the last week or so, look at Russia's actions. They cut back on their oil supplies to the Czechs, because the Czechs made an agreement with us. They have now thrown out the — or forced out — BP out of Russia. And by the way, I — a lot of us thought that might happen.

They continue to put enormous pressures on Georgia in many ways. They're putting pressure on Ukraine. They are blocking action in the United Nations Security Council on Iran. And so…

STEPHANOPOULOS: But how is kicking out of the G-8 going to make that better? We need them…

MCCAIN: The G-8…

STEPHANOPOULOS: … to help secure nuclear weapons. We need them to help contain Iran. To kick them out is going to make it harder, isn't it?

MCCAIN: We need to improve their behavior. We need to make them realize that the G-8 was founded — basically, countries that are democratic, have our values and our goals and shared principles. And President Putin and…

STEPHANOPOULOS: The former President Putin.

MCCAIN: … his government — former President Putin, and now Prime Minister Putin — has taken his country down a path that I think is very harmful.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Do you still think he's in charge?

MCCAIN: Oh, yes. I am confident — yes, I believe that he's in charge. And I don't think he would have chosen his successor, if he didn't think he would remain in charge.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Well, let me get back to the original question.

MCCAIN: They've become — they've become an autocracy.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Because President Medvedev says this proposal isn't even serious. So, I go back.

How are you going to exclude Russia from the G-8, when every other country is against it?

MCCAIN: I will stand up for what I think is the best for the United States of America and the world, the way that Ronald Reagan went to Berlin and said, "Tear down this wall."

And they said, "Oh, he's a cowboy. He's going to make relations worse. He shouldn't say that."

And yet, we wanted the Wall down. We want better Russian behavior internationally. And we have every right to expect it.

And I will do what I can to see that they reverse many of the behavior patterns, which have really been very unhelpful to peace in the world.

STEPHANOPOULOS: What is your position on gay adoption? You told the "New York Times" you were against it, even in cases where the children couldn't find another home. But then your staff backtracked a bit.

What is your position?

MCCAIN: My position is, it's not the reason why I'm running for president of the United States. And I think that two parent families are best for America.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Well, what do you mean by that, it's not the reason you're running for president of the United States?

MCCAIN: Because I think — well, I think that it's — it is important for us to emphasize family values. But I think it's very important that we understand that we have other challenges, too.

I'm running for president of the United States, because I want to help with family values. And I think that family values are important, when we have two parent — families that are of parents that are the traditional family.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But there are several hundred thousand children in the country who don't have a home. And if a gay couple wants to adopt them, what's wrong with that?

MCCAIN: I am for the values that two parent families, the traditional family represents.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So, you're against gay adoption.

MCCAIN: I am for the values and principles that two parent families represent. And I also do point out that many of these decisions are made by the states, as we all know.

And I will do everything I can to encourage adoption, to encourage all of the things that keeps families together, including educational opportunities, including a better economy, job creation.

And I'm running for president, because I want to help families in America. And one of my positions is that I believe that family values and family traditions are preserved.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Opponents of affirmative action are trying to get a referendum on the ballot here that would do away with affirmative action. Do you support that?

MCCAIN: Yes, I do. I do not believe in quotas. But I have not seen the details of some of these proposals. But I've always opposed quotas.

STEPHANOPOULOS: But the one here in Arizona you support.

MCCAIN: I support it, yes.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Finally — and I'm just going to take a stab at this. I pretty much know the answer.

I've been told that when you're talking about your vice presidential pick, the way you characterize it is, you want to scramble the jets with your pick. What does that mean?

MCCAIN: I've never used that phrase.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Never used that phrase?

MCCAIN: Never.

STEPHANOPOULOS: So, what do you want to do with your pick?

MCCAIN: I want to be the best team that we can provide the United States of America in very difficult times.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Are you getting close on a decision?

MCCAIN: We are still in the process.

STEPHANOPOULOS: Senator McCain, thank you very much.

MCCAIN: Thank you.

CNN Airs Entire McCain Interview (CNN 07/27/08 11:00am)
BLITZER: Let's talk about, you're elected president of the United States, it's January 20th, 2009, first day, you're in the Oval Office, after you're sworn in, what's the first thing you do?

MCCAIN: You sit down with your national security advisers and say, how can we keep the peace in the world? What do we need to do? And what actions do we have to take? What actions have worked? Which ones haven't? Which policies haven't worked? And keep this nation safe and secure.

And then, of course, how do we restore trust and confidence in government. We've got to take some measures to reform the way that government does business, the way Congress does business, and get Americans trust and confidence back in this country.

And that means — and their government. And that means reforming the way the government does business, which Americans have lost trust and confidence in.

BLITZER: And what about what a lot of people call "ISSUE #1," the domestic economy, which seems to be in real serious trouble right now, by almost all accounts, will still be in serious trouble in January of next year? What's the first thing you do on the economy?

MCCAIN: Restrain spending is the first thing we have to do. We have to restrain out of control spending. We have to reform government. We have to embark on measures to keep people in their homes, to keep their taxes low, to create new jobs, and to get our economy back moving again.

And that's part of the trust and confidence. We've got to regain the trust and confidence of the American people because we have to act together. We have to put our country first. Congress and the government is fundamentally gridlocked, as we know.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And that's why we see the all-time low approval ratings of Congress. And so we have to sit down together, Republican and Democrat, together, and start working for the good of this nation, keep people in their homes, provide them with affordable and available health care, create new jobs all across this country.

And we can do it. And one of the major, major aspects of this, of course, is energy independence. The price of a gallon of gas is killing, is harming the fixed income Americans very badly. They're the ones that drive the oldest automobiles and drive the furthest.

And so we have to have this positive movement and mission, a national mission to become independent of foreign oil.

BLITZER: All right. We're going to get all of those issues one by one. Let's talk a little bit about the national security issues. You're president of the United States, you've vowed that you will capture Osama bin Laden and bring him to justice. Now we know that President Bush since 9/11 has been doing the best he can. What would you do differently?

MCCAIN: Well, I'm not going to telegraph a lot of the things that I'm going to do because then it might compromise our ability to do so. But, look, I know the area, I've been there, I know wars, I know how to win wars, and I know how to improve our capabilities so that we will capture Osama bin Laden — or put it this way, bring him to justice.

BLITZER: All right. If you capture.

MCCAIN: We will do it, I know how to do it.

BLITZER: If you capture him alive, what do you do with him?

MCCAIN: Of course you put him on trial. I mean, there are ample precedents of — for that. And it might be a good thing to reveal to the world the enormity of this guy's crimes and his intentions, which are still there and he's working night and day to destroy everything we stand for and believe in.

BLITZER: Do you do him a regular civilian trial here in the United States or is it a war crimes tribunal, a military commission, what kind of legal justice would you bring him toward?

MCCAIN: We have various options, but the Nuremburg trials are certainly an example of the kind of tribunal that we could move forward with. I don't think we would have any difficulty devising an internationally-supported mechanism that would mete out justice and there's no problem there.

BLITZER: All right. Let's talk about the war in Iraq right now. Charles Krauthammer, The Washington Post conservative columnist, he writes that the prime minister of Iraq, Nouri al-Maliki, in recent days, quote "vote for Obama, casting the earliest and most ostentatious absentee ballot of this presidential election."

If you were president, and Nouri al-Maliki is still the elected prime minister of Iraq, and he says he wants all U.S. out, what do you do?

MCCAIN: Well, first of all, I know Prime Minister Maliki rather well, I know that he is a politician and I know that they are looking at upcoming elections. I know that he knows and every — and the other leaders know there that it has to be condition-based.

Any withdrawals which will withdraw, we have succeeded, the surge has succeeded, and we are on the road to victory, and we will be out of there, and we may have a residual presence of some kind, as I've always said, but the fact is, the surge has succeeded.

And the fundamental here is that I supported that surge when it was not the popular thing to do. Senator Obama opposed it, said it wouldn't work, even voted to cut off the funds for the men and women who are fighting over there, and still — and he still doesn't understand to the point where he doesn't agree that the surge has succeeded.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

No rational observer — no rational observer who sees the conditions in Iraq today as opposed to two years ago could possibly — could possibly conclude that the surge hasn't succeeded.

So he sees it as a political issue. He doesn't understand the importance of this victory and the consequences of failure and the benefits of success. If we had done what Senator Obama wanted to do, which, by the way, initially would have been the troops out last March, we would've had greater Iranian influence.

We would have had an increase in sectarian violence. We would have seen possibly a wider war in the region, which would have drawn us back.

So I can assure you that Prime Minister Maliki understands that conditions have to be kept. And I want to find — tell you again, General Petraeus, one of the great generals in history, strongly disagrees with Senator Obama and our highest-ranking military officer also says it would be a very dangerous course.

We're not going to go down that road.

BLITZER: What — but if Maliki persists, you're president and he says he wants U.S. troops out and he wants them out, let's say, in a year or two years or 16 months, or whatever, what do you do? Do you just — do you listen to the prime minister?

MCCAIN: He won't. He won't. He won't, because he.

BLITZER: How do you know? How do you know? How do you know this?

MCCAIN: . knows it has to be condition-based. Because I know him, and I know him very well. And I know the other leaders. And I know — I've been there eight times, as you know. And I know them very, very well.

BLITZER: So why do you think he said.

MCCAIN: And the point is.

BLITZER: Why do you think he said that 16 months is basically a pretty good timetable?

MCCAIN: He said it's a pretty good timetable based on conditions on the ground. I think it's a pretty good timetable, as we should — or horizons for withdrawal. But they have to be based on conditions on the ground.

This success is very fragile. It's incredibly impressive, but very fragile. So we know, those of us who have been involved in it for many years, know that if we reverse this, by setting a date for withdrawal, all of the hard-won victory can be reversed.

We're not ready to do that. Too many brave young Americans and their families have sacrificed too much. But we will be out and the difference is we'll be out with victory and honor and not defeat.

Senator Obama has said there is a possibility under his plan we may have to go back. I guarantee you, after they withdraw under what we are doing, we'll never have to go back.

BLITZER: All right. You also made a very serious charge against Senator Obama, you've repeated it, you say you stand by it, that he would rather lose a war to win a political campaign, raising questions about, you know, his motives.

Joe Klein, writing in TIME magazine says: "This is the ninth presidential campaign I've covered, I can't remember a more scurrilous statement by a major party candidate. It smacks of desperation."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Those are pretty strong words from Joe Klein, whom you obviously know. But tell us, are you — what are charging? What are you accusing Obama of doing?

MCCAIN: I am accusing — I am stating the facts. And the facts are that I don't question Senator Obama's patriotism. I'm sure that he's a very patriotic American. I question his judgment because he lacks experience and knowledge. And I question his judgment.

I'm not prepared to see the sacrifice of so many brave young Americans lost because Senator Obama just views this war as another political issue with which he can change positions.

And everybody knows that he was able to obtain the nomination of his party by appealing to the far left and committing to a course of action that I believe was — I know was wrong, because he said the surge would not work, he said it wouldn't succeed.

No rational observer in Iraq today believes that the surge did not succeed. So he just treats it as another political issue because he doesn't understand and he doesn't have the knowledge and the background to make the kind of judgments that are necessary.

And this war has enormous ramifications. If we had lost it, we would have faced enormous challenges in the region, throughout the world, increased Iranian influence, perhaps even having to come back in a wider war.

So he simply does not understand and treats it as another political issue.

BLITZER: But he says that when it comes to judgment, back in 2002 and 2003 — early 2003, before the war, he made the right call in opposing the war to begin with. And he says you blundered, you made the wrong call in supporting going to war against Saddam Hussein.

MCCAIN: I'd be more than happy to go through with all of that again, and historians will. The fact is that Saddam Hussein was bent on the development of weapons of mass destruction. And I would be glad to discuss it.

The fact is what did we do at a critical time when we were about to lose the war? We were losing the war. Senator Obama wanted to get out, I wanted the surge, which was not popular, the surge works. And now what do we do in the future? Do we continue on the path to victory, and we've succeeded, or do we set a time for withdrawal and jeopardize and possibly reverse all of the gains that we have made?

That's the question on the minds of the American people today.

BLITZER: We invited our viewers, Senator McCain, to submit some video questions for you. Sort of our video version of a town hall meeting.

Jonathan Collins of Tampa, Florida, says he's very liberal but he says he has no connection to either to either campaign. He asks this question. I'll play it for you.773 895 8407.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

JONATHAN COLLINS, CNN VIEWER: Can you please, in layman's terms, so the entire world will know, when these events happen, we have won the war in Iraq? Can you please give us your definition?

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Go ahead, senator. I guess the question is define victory in Iraq?

MCCAIN: It's the classic outcome of a successful counterinsurgency, which this strategy is. An effective government, a secure environment, a social, economic and political process that is moving forward. Very importantly a legal system that is functioning to protect the rights of the people. Americans withdrawing and the Iraqi people have a chance at freedom and democracy, which obviously they were never going to have under Saddam Hussein and we avoid the risk of a wider war. We reduce the influence of Iran in the region, we have a positive impact even as far away as Afghanistan because success breeds success, but an Iraq that is a stable, normal country and it's not over, as I said. Al Qaeda is not defeated. They are on their heels but they are not defeated. That's why we have a ways to go.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But the progress by any parameter has been dramatically good and that's the path to victory in Iraq and you can see it every single day in Baghdad, Mosul, Basra and around the country and I say thank God.

BLITZER: I have a bunch of short questions and hopefully some sort answers.

MCCAIN: Sure. A short answer, OK.

BLITZER: We'll go through some straight talk as you like to do right now.

If Israel were to decide its existence or its security were threatened and bombed Iran's nuclear facilities, would you as president stand with Israel?

MCCAIN: I can only tell you I will not discuss hypotheticals and I can't but I will tell you this. The United States of American is committed to making sure that there is never a second Holocaust. That will be what I will do as president of the United States.

BLITZER: If you were president, would you move the U.S. Embassy from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem?

MCCAIN: Yes.

BLITZER: When?

MCCAIN: Right away.

BLITZER: Like, as soon as you were inaugurated? Right away you would order the State Department to do that?

MCCAIN: I've been committed to that proposition for years.

BLITZER: The - we have this question from Robert Weisman (ph) of Skokie, Illinois. He considers himself on the liberal side of the spectrum. But he has this question. Listen to this.

(BEGIN VIDEO CLIP)

UNIDENTIFIED MALE: Senator McCain, do you agree with or will you unequivocally reject and repudiate the Bush doctrine of preemptive war?

(END VIDEO CLIP)

BLITZER: Did you hear that question?

MCCAIN: Well, that's a very, very tough question and it's based on the judgment of the commander-in-chief. No nation can wait until it is attacked when it is clear that there is going to be an impending attack from either a terrorist organization or a hostile nation.

So those kinds of judgments need to be made by presidents and again, you have to have the knowledge and experience and the background to make those kinds of judgments. Do I favor preemptive war? Of course not. None of us do.

But it's the first obligation of the president of the United States to secure our nation and to make sure we are not attacked and American lives are lost.

So that's why I said when you asked me earlier what is the first thing I would do as president and that's make sure everything has been done and is being done to ensure America's safety and security.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BLITZER: All right we've got a few more quick questions.

MCCAIN: Sure.

BLITZER: If you were president, would you take steps, would you work to repeal Roe v. Wade?

MCCAIN: I don't agree with the decision. It's a decision that's there. I will appoint judges to the United States Supreme Court that do enforce strictly the Constitution of the United States and do not legislate from the bench.

BLITZER: Do you support a pathway to citizenship for millions of illegal immigrants in the United States?

MCCAIN: Once we have secured the borders. And I have not changed my position! We tried twice in the United States Senate, comprehensive immigration reform, which meant securing our borders, temporary worker program that works and a path to citizenship for many, not all, but certainly many of the people who are already here illegally. Americans want the border secured first. We can do that and we can establish a truly temporary worker program through the use of biometric, tamper proof documents and we can put some people or a lot of them on the path to citizenship, requiring they pay fines, learning English, do all the things necessary but the principle that they cannot have any priority of those who either waited who came to this country legally.

BLITZER: Given the high price of gas right now, you recently changed your position on offshore oil drilling but you still oppose drilling in the Alaska National Wildlife Refuge.

If the price continues to go up could you see you changing your mind on ANWR, as it's called?

MCCAIN: These are ways to attack a fundamental problem, as we all know, that are hurting Americans. First let's get offshore drilling going.

Let's do it now. We can do it now. Oil company executives say that it could be as short a time as one to two years. Contrary to the belief of some, just the president's announcement of the lifting of the federal moratorium had an impact on the futures cost of a barrel of oil. Let's go going drilling offshore first and let's do whatever is necessary and that includes nuclear power, both of which Senator Obama opposes.

BLITZER: You're in Colorado right now. They have an initiative on their ballot in November that would eliminate affirmative action. I don't know if you're familiar with that referendum but is that a good idea?

MCCAIN: I'm not familiar with the referendum. It's hard for me to say. I've always opposed quotas.

BLITZER: On the vice president front, this is the final question, senator, there are stories out there you want to do this before the Olympic Games start in Beijing on August 8 and not wait any longer. Are those reports true?

MCCAIN: I can't comment on the process that we're going through and I'm sure you understand and every nominee of the party has gone through this and I appreciate you asking the question but I can't comment on the process and I thank you, though, and I know you understand.

BLITZER: Of course we understand. I'm not asking you to tell us who it is. I want to know the timing of when you think we'll know.

MCCAIN: Well, I - I - I - I again cannot comment on the process and I apologize for being so obtuse.

BLITZER: Don't apologize, you have every right to be obtuse. You have every right to not answer. This is a free country, as you want.

Senator McCain, appreciate your time.

MCCAIN: But on this .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BLITZER: Go ahead.

MCCAIN: You know, on this one I'm sure that you understand, I'm sure our viewers understand when you start commenting you really get on a slippery slope and sometimes that's unfair to the people that are under consideration and I thank you for having me on, Wolf, this has been a very in-depth interview and I appreciate the time.

BLITZER: We appreciate your joining us and we hope you join us again sooner rather than later.

MCCAIN: Sure.

BLITZER: Good luck out there on the campaign trail, Senator.

MCCAIN: Sure.

BLITZER: Good luck out there on the campaign trail, Senator.

MCCAIN: Thank you.

Highlight #2
Panel Finds McCain's Week of Misfortune Humorous (MSNBC 07/27/07 9:46am)
JULIE MASON: John McCain had a terrible week, Alex. Everything from the unfortunate little ride in the golf cart with former President Bush to the abortive trip to an oil rig in Louisiana that got cancelled and then he ended up in a grocery aisle in Pennsylvania looking like Mayor McCheese in the dairy aisle [...]. Everyone knew the hurricane was coming. It wasn't secret information.

[...]

JONATHAN ALLEN: [McCain] wasn't drawing David Hasselhoff-type crowds at historic monuments.

[laughter]

ALLEN: So, to that extent, it was a rough week for John McCain. I think there are a lot of people, on the republican side, that are looking at his week and saying, 'Maybe he should have just backed off and ceded the stage to Barack Obama for the week.' He wasn't going to be able to compete and everything he tried to do appeared to be very minimal by comparison […]. So I think there are probably some regrets on the republican side that McCain didn't use the week differently.

Hagel Comments on McCain's Harsh Accusations (CBS 07/27/08 10:43am)
CHUCK HAGEL: […] I think John is treading on some very thin ground here when he impugns motives and when we start to get into, 'You're less patriotic than me, I'm more patriotic…' I admire/respect John McCain very much. I have a good relationship. To this day we do.

We talk often. I talked to him right before I went to Iraq […]. John's better than that. He's not asked for my advice on this and, since you've asked me the question, I think both he and Barack have got to be very careful here because it's just not responsible to be saying things like that. Again, if for no other reason, for the good of this country and the world, one of these two men […] is gonna have to bring this country together and the world to deal with huge problems. […]

JACK REED: [on John McCain's latest anti-Obama ad] that is a completely distorted and I think, inappropriate advertisement.

[...]

BOB SCHIEFFER: Do you think that ad was appropriate?

HAGEL: I do not think it was appropriate.

SCHIEFFER: You did not.

HAGEL: I do not.

--
Jacob Roberts
PAO

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

208.420.3470 (c)

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Jim Margolis" <jim.margolis@gmmb.com> "Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com> "Huma Abedin" <ha16@hillaryclinton.com> "Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com> "Robby Mook" <re47@hillaryclinton.com> "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com> "Kristina Schake" <kschake@hillaryclinton.com> "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com> "Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com> "Teddy Goff" <tgoff@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	5/3/2015 6:33:53 AM
Subject:	Clinton Cash and Week Ahead issues to discuss tomorrow am

Friends - I wanted to lay out some issues to consider related to Clinton Cash and making news next week for discussion on Monday morning's call. Hope you are enjoying great weather in the meantime. JP

HRC ENGAGEMENT ON CLINTON CASH

The biggest question for this group is if and how HRC engages on Clinton Cash this week and what are the "two lines" she would deliver.

Reminder on this week's events for her. WJC on Today show on Monday; HRC in Vegas on Tuesday in front of the pool for an immigration event; fundraiser and lunch with the Mayor in SFO on Wednesday; LA fundraisers on Thursday; Bay Area fundraiser on Friday. All of the fundraisers are closed. To restate what we all discussed on Thursday and Friday - I would rather she not engage with press while we are in Vegas. Like to keep her on immigration and we handle response.

Below is a written statement Dan had drafted when we thought she might engage on this last week - so gives folks something to react to:

Statement from Hillary Clinton:
The suggestion that I or President Obama or any other senior official in this administration would ever allow decisions about national security to influenced by personal considerations – let alone some charitable donations – is absurd. Anyone who's had to sit in the Situation Room and make life and death choices would understand that. And if anyone ever donated to the Clinton Foundation in the hopes of influencing official government policy, they'd be a fool. Even the author himself has now admitted that he found zero evidence of any wrong-doing or quid pro quo. Unfortunately, the incredible life-saving work of the Clinton Foundation has gotten lost in these attacks. More than 9 million people with HIV/AIDS around the world have benefited from more affordable medicine because of the Clinton Foundation. Millions of American children have access to healthier food. Farmers in Africa are growing better crops. Women entrepreneurs are starting businesses. I'm so proud of the work that Bill, Chelsea, and all the professionals at the Foundation have done and continue to do. And I hope that people will judge the Foundation on that record of accomplishment, not on baseless conspiracy theories

CLINTON CASH RESPONSE/LAUNCH OF "THE BRIEFING"

On Tuesday morning we will launch The Briefing page on our website. This page will be where supporters and others can get information and points on what she is for, but also where we would post pushback on the book. Below is what we currently plan to post on Tuesday related to the book.

We are also considering a Podesta post that we would put on Medium and our site that unveils the concept of The Briefing, debunks the book a bit, and notes that while we will respond aggressively to attacks - we know that they are just designed to stop her bc R's know that she has right vision/policies to win and will not be distracted from our main highway of selling the positive. John and I discussed yesterday and think it is important that supporters and press know that we will deal aggressively with unfair attacks, but our real focus and her's is her proactive vision. Important that we do not appear beleaguered.

Clinton Cash Content for The Briefing:

1) a comprehensive post that debunks the book with all of our attacks in one place;

2) a short video narrated by Brian Fallon highlighting most egregious errors (we will need more time to do comprehensive version we discussed with HRC on Friday, but think it is worth doing short one for the book release on Tuesday);

3) a number of social media products that our supporters can share and are designed to get buzz with press and supporters and further discredit the author and the book;

4) the products we have already put out over the course of the last week.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Denis McDonough" <dmcdonough@barackobama.com>
To:	"James B. Steinberg" <djsberg@gmail.com>
	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
	"Mark Lippert" <mlippert@barackobama.com>
Date:	10/23/2008 1:39:00 AM
Subject:	Dennis Ross

Fellas –

Dennis was asked to write an article about transition for Sunday's Outlook, and he did it. He says that he argues that this transition cannot be "business as usual" and there cannot be a lull in efforts to stop Iran's nuclear program.

He is identified in the byline as someone who gives advice to BO.

I would have preferred Dennis not write this or at least not be publicly identified as one of our advisers, but we are where we are. If you all have serious heartburn, please let me know and I will go back at Dennis.

Thanks,
DM

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Myroslaw Smorodsky" <msmorodsky@uaba.org>
To:	"Myroslaw Smorodsky" <msmorodsky@uaba.org>
Date:	1/5/2015 8:09:27 AM
Subject:	Ukrainian American Bar Association; Russia's 2014 War Against Ukraine
Attachments:	14-12-10 VASSYLENKO The 2014 War -An Endeavor for a Comprehensive Analysis .pdf 2014-12-10 UABA News Update.pdf

Ukrainian American Bar Association

The Ukrainian American Bar Association (UABA) applauds the United States Congress and Pres. Obama's Administration for the passage of the Ukraine Freedom Support Act of 2014. With the enactment of this law, the United States has sent a clear message to the world that it respects and upholds the principles of international rule of law not only by words but also by deeds and that Russia's aggression against Ukraine carries serious consequences.

At its most recent annual convention in Washington DC, the UABA was honored to have as a presenter Amb. Volodymyr Vassylenko, a leading Ukrainian diplomat, jurist, scholar and former judge of the Hague International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia. His presentation examines the origin of Russia's unlawful war of aggression against Ukraine and the underlying motivation for its actions. It is an indispensable tool in formulating an effective response to Russia's anticipated future aggressive actions against Ukraine. Towards this end, we attach the executive summary of Amb. Vassylenko's presentation as well as its full text for your consideration.

For further information, please contact
Myroslaw Smorodsky, Esq.
Communications Director of the Ukrainian American Bar Association (UABA)
Tel: 201-507-4500; Email; myroslaw@smorodsky.com ; Website; www.smorodsky.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Moira Whelan" <mwhelan@nsnetwork.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 10/28/2008 6:13:40 AM
Subject: [big campaign] The Conservative Schism on Foreign Policy

Just doing our part on the whole "conservatives fighting themselves" meme...

http://www.nsnetwork.org/node/1036

THE GROWING CONSERVATVE SCHISM ON FOREIGN POLICY

Colin Powell's endorsement of Senator Obama signifies the culmination of a long simmering split within the conservative foreign policy establishment between neoconservatives and pragmatists. The Republican foreign policy establishment was once dominated by foreign policy realists and pragmatists such as Henry Kissinger, James Baker, Brent Scowcroft, Colin Powell, and Robert Gates. However, following the events of September 11th, the neoconservative world view advocated by Vice President Cheney, Donald Rumsfeld, Paul Wolfowitz, Doug Feith, Richard Perle, and John Bolton became ascendant, causing tremendous tension within the Bush administration. As the neoconservative experiment in Iraq has proven to be a failure, pragmatists have reasserted some authority in the final years of the Bush administration. But the Iraq War has undoubtedly deepened the divide.

John McCain clearly represents a continuation of the neoconservative foreign policy philosophy. His early, relentless, and unequivocal support for the Iraq war has been in line with the Necons. As has his refusal to negotiate with Iran – a position that Secretary Gates himself disagreed with when he chaired a Council on Foreign Relations task force on Iran in 2004. McCain's hardline response to the Russia crisis echoes that of John Bolton, not Henry Kissinger or George Schultz, who have both advocated caution. And McCain's approach to dealing with our allies, creating a new League of Democracies, is opposed by pragmatists and supported by Neoconservatives such as Robert Kagan.

Thus, it is not at all surprising to see a number of pragmatists breaking with the Republican nominee. Colin Powell's dramatic endorsement of Barack Obama was the clearest example. Senator Richard Lugar, former chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, has endorsed Obama's view towards diplomacy. Brent Scowcroft, former national security advisor to George H.W. Bush, refused to endorse either candidate, as has Republican Chuck Hagel, whose foreign policy views are clearly in line with Obama's.

The question coming out of this election will be whether the pragmatists return to the Republican fold and take back the mantle of leadership from the Necons, or whether they continue to move away from the Republican Party and perhaps even join the Democrats.

THE BUSH ADMINISTRATION HAS BEEN DIVIDED BETWEEN THE PRAGMATISTS AND THE NEOCONS

From the start there was an ideological division between the Neocons and pragmatists, which was most evident when it came to the issue of Iraq. At the time, the New York Times reported that, "the philosophical discord that is becoming increasingly obvious in the current Bush administration has deep roots in the last. Hawk versus dove, unilateralist versus multilateralist, whatever one calls these disagreements, few experts think they will go away. In fact, the divide in the administration is likely to affect not only future choices on Iraq but also on North Korea, Yasir Arafat and the Palestinians, and military issues like missile defense." In the run up to the war, the philosophical divide was sharp. "Mr. Cheney, who was highly skeptical of Secretary Powell's proposal to seek a Security Council resolution to send inspectors to Baghdad, will probably disagree again over whether to ask for Security Council approval before using military force, officials and diplomats predict. 'This is a profound philosophical argument that may come up again and again,' said a Western diplomat close to Secretary Powell. 'At issue is whether the United States should continue to operate through the international system or go it alone. Powell is keeping the hard-liners at bay.'" [NY Times 9/24/02]

As time went on, Colin Powell and other pragmatists were marginalized during Bush's first term. It has only been in the final year of the Bush administration that the pragmatists have truly regained their footing. There have been "longstanding foreign policy conflicts within the administration that have often pitted Mr. Powell against Vice President Dick Cheney and Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld. . . Mr. Powell and the State Department staff have clashed repeatedly with Mr. Rumsfeld and his team at the Pentagon over Iraq and other issues." We have seen an important shift in the past year. Secretary Gates and Condoleezza Rice now seem to have more influence that Dick Cheney and the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Neoconservative wing. On issue after issue the Bush administration has finally moderated. "The administration has pushed ahead with high-level diplomatic negotiations with Iran and North Korea, agreed to a 'time horizon' for a reduction of U.S. forces in Iraq and announced plans last week to shift troops and other resources from Iraq to Afghanistan. U.S. officials also confirmed last week that Bush has formally authorized cross-border raids into Pakistan without that government's approval -- an idea that Obama first endorsed, and was heavily criticized for, last year." [NY Times, 2/4/04 . Washington Post, 9/15/08]

McCain's Neoconservative Positions are Not in Line with the Pragmatists

Iraq

McCain: From the start, John McCain was an outspoken supporter of the neoconservative plan to invade Iraq. "That's where the tough part of this whole scenario is going to begin. And that is that, after the Taliban are overthrown -- which I believe they will be -- I have very little doubt in my mind -- after bin Laden is either taken prisoner or killed and his network is destroyed, then what's next? Obviously, Iraq is still bent on -- Saddam Hussein is still bent on developing weapons of mass destruction. Obviously, the Iranians are still supporting terrorist organizations, as are the Syrians. That's where the tough choices and decisions are going to be made." [MSNBC, Hardball, 10/3/01]

Neocons: Vice President Dick Cheney argued that the war in Iraq would spread democracy throughout the Middle East. "Regime change in Iraq would bring about a number of benefits to the region. When the gravest of threats are eliminated, the freedom-loving peoples of the region will have a chance to promote the values that can bring lasting peace. As for the reaction of the Arab 'street,' the Middle East expert Professor Fouad Ajami predicts that after liberation, the streets in Basra and Baghdad are 'sure to erupt in joy in the same way the throngs in Kabul greeted the Americans.' Extremists in the region would have to rethink their strategy of Jihad. Moderates throughout the region would take heart. And our ability to advance the Israeli-Palestinian peace process would be enhanced, just as it was following the liberation of Kuwait in 1991." [Cheney, 8/02]

Pragmatists:

Brent Scowcroft was critical of the administration during the run up to the war. "'How do the neocons bring democracy to Iraq? You invade, you threaten and pressure, you evangelize.' And now, Scowcroft said, America is suffering from the consequences of that brand of revolutionary utopianism. 'This was said to be part of the war on terror, but Iraq feeds terrorism.' The first Gulf War was a success, Scowcroft said, because the President knew better than to set unachievable goals. 'I'm not a pacifist,' he said.' I believe in the use of force. But there has to be a good reason for using force. And you have to know when to stop using force.'" "I thought we ought to make it our duty to help make the world friendlier for the growth of liberal regimes. You encourage democracy over time, with assistance, and aid, the traditional way. Not how the neocons do it." [The New Yorker, 10/31/05 . Scowcroft, 8/15/02]

In his new book Bob Woodward outlines Colin Powell's objections to the war in Iraq. Tom Brokaw quoted from Woodward's book and questioned Powell on meet the press, "'Powell . . . didn't think [Iraq] was a necessary war, and yet he had gone along in a hundred ways, large and small. He had resisted at times but had succumbed to the momentum and his own sense of deference--even obedience--to the president. . . . Perhaps more than anyone else in the administration, Powell had been the `closer' for the president's case on war. . .' And then you were invited to appear before the Iraq Study Group. 'Why did we go into Iraq with so few people?' [former Secretary of State James] Baker asked. ... 'Colin just exploded at that point, [former Secretary of Defense William] Perry recalled later. 'He unloaded, Former White House Chief of Staff] Leon Panetta added. 'He was angry. He was mad as hell.' . . . Powell left [the Study Group meeting]. Baker turned to Panetta and said solemnly, `He's the one guy who could have perhaps prevented this from happening.'" [Meet the Press, 10/19/08]

Iran

McCain: McCain has consistently opposed engaging with Iran. From his reckless "bomb, bomb, bomb Iran" remark to his characterization of tough negotiations as appeasement, Senator McCain has consistently followed the approach of the Bush administration that has utterly failed to hinder Iran's nuclear development. He has consistently derided Barack Obama as naïve for willing to have tough direct diplomacy with Iran. McCain has instead called for more sanctions and the continuation of a policy that has not worked for the past five years. [John McCain, 4/18/07 . John McCain, 5/15/08 . John McCain conference call, 5/15/08 . JohnMcCain.com . John McCain, 1/15/06]

Neocons: Richard Perle rejected the Bush administration's attempts at diplomacy. "President George W. Bush's words on Iran have been clear and unmistakable, but the administration's decision to negotiate with the clerics on nuclear energy has weakened the U.S. position and has sent mixed messages to Iranian dissidents who look to the United States for support. . . she [Secretary Rice] is now in the midst of--and increasingly represents--a diplomatic establishment that is driven to accommodate its allies even when (or, it seems, especially when) such allies counsel the appeasement of our adversaries. [Richard Perle, 7/21/06]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Pragmatists:

Defense Secretary Gates chaired a Council on Foreign Relations task force that in 2004 advocated direct talks with Iran. "The United States' long lack of direct contact with, and presence in, Iran drastically impedes its understanding of Iran's domestic, as well as regional, dynamics. In turn, this reduces Washington's influence across the Middle East in ways that are manifestly harmful to its ultimate interests. Direct dialogue approached candidly and without restrictions on issues of mutual concern would serve Iran's interests. And establishing connections with Iranian society would directly benefit U.S. national objectives of enhancing the stability and security of this critical region." [CFR, 2004]

James Baker disagrees with McCain on Iran. Despite his support for John McCain, James Baker's position on negotiations with Iran align with Barack Obama, not John McCain. "You don't just talk to your friends, you talk to your enemies as well. Diplomacy involves talking to your enemies. You don't reward your enemies necessarily by talking to them if you are tough and you know what you are doing. You don't appease them. Talking to an enemy is not in my view appeasement." Baker noted that when he was secretary of state for President Bush's father, he made 15 trips to Syria in 1990 and 1991, "at the time when Syria was on the list of countries who were state sponsors of terrorism. On the 16th trip, guess what, lo and behold, Syria changed 25 years of policy and agreed for the first time in the history to sit at the table with Israel, which is what Israel wanted at the time." Baker concluded: "All I am saying, that would never happened if I, if we, hadn't been sufficiently dedicated that we were going to keep at it." [James Baker, 10/6/06]

Russia

McCain: John McCain has taken a radically hawkish approach towards Russia. Whether it be saying he " looked into Mr. Putin's eyes and I saw three things — a K and a G and a B," his proposal to kick Russia out of the G8, or his reaction to the Russia Georgia crisis, McCain has taken an aggressive stance in line with the hardliners in the Bush administration. Earlier this year McCain declared that, "Western nations should make clear that the solidarity of NATO, from the Baltic to the Black Sea, is indivisible." Then following the outbreak of war between Russia and Georgia, McCain belligerently proclaims, "Russian President Medvedev and Prime Minister Putin must understand the severe, long-term negative consequences that their government's actions will have for Russia's relationship with the U.S. and Europe," declaring, "we are all Georgians." [Reuters, 8/11/08 . Salon, 6/09/08]

Neocons*: John Bolton took a hardline approach to the Russian war with Georgia similar to that of McCain. "As bad as the bloodying of Georgia is, the broader consequences are worse. The United States fiddled while Georgia burned, not even reaching the right rhetorical level in its public statements until three days after the Russian invasion began, and not, at least to date, matching its rhetoric with anything even approximating decisive action. This pattern is the very definition of a paper tiger. . . The European Union took the lead in diplomacy, with results approaching Neville Chamberlain's moment in the spotlight at Munich. . . Even this dismal performance was enough to relegate Nato to an entirely backstage role, while Russian tanks and planes slammed into a 'faraway country', as Chamberlain once observed so thoughtfully. In New York, paralysed by the prospect of a Russian veto, the UN Security Council, that Temple of the High-Minded, was as useless as it was during the Cold War. In fairness to Russia, it at least still seems to understand how to exercise power in the Council, which some other Permanent Members often appear to have forgotten." [Bolton, 8/15/08]

Pragmatists:

Kissinger and Schultz have argued for a less confrontational approach towards Russia. "This drift toward confrontation must be ended. However appropriate as a temporary device for showing our concern, isolating Russia is not a sustainable long-range policy. It is neither feasible nor desirable to isolate a country adjoining Europe, Asia and the Middle East and possessing a stockpile of nuclear weapons comparable to that of the United States. Given Russia's historically ambivalent and emotionally insecure relations with its environment, this approach is not likely to evoke considered or constructive responses. Even much of Western Europe is uneasy about such a course." [Washington Post, 10/8/08]

The pragmatists agree: we should not overreact to crisis. As the conflict between Russia and Georgia erupted, John McCain recklessly issued bellicose statements, condemning Russia without waiting for all the facts. However, Henry Kissinger was not as rash, "We have to face the fact that the first shot in Georgia was fired on the Georgian side. Now, Russia reacted in an excessive manner, but we should not make the whole relationship depend on the pictures that you showed. And I would urge the new President, as I am urging this President to explore the possibilities of cooperation and be very sure before we go the route of cutting off WTO and the other international measures for which cooperation with Russia may be very important." James Baker agreed with Kissinger's assessment saying, "Look at it in a strategic context and not tactically…we have some big-picture issues that we need to be conscious of when we think about our future with Russia, and we ought to cooperate with them where we can, where they fit, but we ought to also be willing to confront them where our vital interests are involved. We are committed to the independence of these former republics of the former Soviet Union, and that should continue to be our position. That doesn't mean we ought to send the 101st Airborne in to guard the South Ossetian border. I mean, that would not make very good sense and that's not the kind of thing we ought to be speculating about." Secretary Powell also said, "Now, in the current situation the Russians acted brutally. I think they acted foolishly. But it was also absolutely predictable what the Russians would do. You could see them stacking up their troops. And I think it was foolhardy on the part of President Saakashvili and the Georgian government to kick over this can, to light a match in a room full of gasoline." When asked by CNN's Frank Sesno, "So you're saying the Georgians provoked this." [CNAS, 9/15/08]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Allies

McCain: John McCain has been a powerful proponent of the League of Democracies. "Our organizations and partnerships must be as international as the challenges we confront. . . This would be unlike Woodrow Wilson's doomed plan for the universal-membership League of Nations. Instead, it would be similar to what Theodore Roosevelt envisioned: like-minded nations working together for peace and liberty. The organization could act when the UN fails -- to relieve human suffering in places such as Darfur, combat HIV/AIDS in sub-Saharan Africa, fashion better policies to confront environmental crises, provide unimpeded market access to those who endorse economic and political freedom, and take other measures unattainable by existing regional or universal-membership systems. . . This League of Democracies would not supplant the UN or other international organizations but complement them by harnessing the political and moral advantages offered by united democratic action. By taking steps such as bringing concerted pressure to bear on tyrants in Burma (renamed Myanmar by its military government in 1989) or Zimbabwe, uniting to impose sanctions on Iran, and providing support to struggling democracies in Serbia and Ukraine, the League of Democracies would serve as a unique handmaiden of freedom." [Foreign Affairs, November/December 2007]

Neocons: Robert Kagan- Neocon Godfather- is one of few supporters for McCain's League of Democracies. "[T]he world's democracies could make common cause to act in humanitarian crises when the UN Security Council cannot reach unanimity. If people find that prospect unsettling, then they should seek the disbandment of NATO and the European Union and other regional organizations which not only can but, in the case of Kosovo, have taken collective action in crises when the Security Council was deadlocked. The difference is that the league of democracies would not be limited to Europeans and Americans but would include the world's other great democracies, such as India, Brazil, Japan and Australia, and would have even greater legitimacy."

Pragmatists: Brent Scowcroft rejects McCain's League of Democracies proposal. Brent "Scowcroft is said to have expressed reservations about Mr. McCain's call for creating a League of Democracies as a complement to the United Nations. An associate of Mr. Scowcroft said he viewed it as an effort to diminish the United Nations -- a target of scorn among neoconservatives -- and inhibit engagement with enemies." [NY Times, 4/10/08]

THE PRAGMATISTS ARE FINALLY ABANDONING MCCAIN AND THE NEOCONSERVATIVE FOREIGN POLICY OF THE LAST EIGHT YEARS

Colin Powell's endorsement of Obama is a sign that progressives and pragmatists in different parties are more similar than pragmatists and Neocons in the same party. On Meet the Press this week, Secretary Powell, said that "I have some concerns about the direction that the party has taken in recent years. It has moved more to the right than I would like to see it, but that's a choice the party makes." "The president will also have to make decisions quickly as to how to deal with Iraq and Afghanistan. And also I think the president has to reach out to the world and show that there is a new president, a new administration that is looking forward to working with our friends and allies. And in my judgment, also willing to talk to people who we have not been willing to talk to before. Because this is a time for outreach" [Meet the Press, 10/19/08]

Richard Lugar, Republican Co-chair of the Senate Foreign Committee supports Obama's approach to foreign policy. "He [Obama] correctly cautions against the implication that hostile nations must be dealt with almost exclusively through isolation or military force. In some cases, refusing to talk can even be dangerous." CQ politics reported that "Lugar also used his speech to underscore his concern that U.S. foreign policy has become too reactive. 'If most U.S. foreign policy attention is devoted to crises fomented by hostile regimes, we are ceding the initiative to our enemies and reducing our capacity to lead the world in ways that are more likely to affect our future.' "Lugar also rejected the military-centric foreign policy of John McCain and the Bush administration hawks, "Any realistic American foreign policy must redeploy diplomatic, military, scientific, and economic resources." [CQ Politics, 10/15/08 . Lugar, 3/13/06]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

John McCain's friend and Republican colleague in the Senate, Chuck Hagel has rejected the influence of neocons in the party and has not endorsed McCain. "I am not happy with the Republican Party today. It's been hijacked by a group of single-minded almost isolationists, insulationists, power-projectors." Hagel has rejected the foreign policy approach of John McCain, "I never understand how anyone in any realm of civilized discourse could sort through the big issues and challenges and threats and figure out how to deal with those without engaging in some way.... I am confident that if Obama is elected president that is the approach we will take. And my friend John McCain said some other things about that. We'll see, but in my opinion it has to be done. It is essential… You take some risks in talking about this, especially in the Congress, because you can immediately be branded as an appeaser… If you engage a world power or a rival, it doesn't mean you agree with them or subscribe with what they believe or you support them in any way. What it does tell you is that you've got a problem you need to resolve. And you've got to understand the other side and the other side has got to understand you." [Huffington Post, 5/20/08 . CBS, 5/13/07]

Brent Scowcroft refuses to endorse McCain. The retired Air Force General and National Security Advisor for the elder Bush is considered one of the most important foreign policy thinkers in the Republican party, and he has refused to endorse John McCain for president considering "himself officially 'neutral' in the presidential contest between Barack Obama and John McCain, and is willing to offer advice to either candidate. . . The fact that such a foreign policy heavyweight in the GOP could sit out a presidential election, however, reflects the lingering tension between the realist camp of advisers, including Gen. Colin Powell, who advised President George H.W. Bush, and the neoconservative clique that gained influence during the tenure of Bush 43." [Huffington Post, 7/23/08]

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail lori@progressiveaccountability.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "German Marshall Fund" <press@gmfus.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 1/26/2016 6:00:00 PM
Subject: GMF's World Wire: EU Defense Strategy | Turkey & Russia's Proxy War | Uncertainty in China

If you have problems viewing this email, you can view it as a web page. To view the mobile-friendly web page click here

G | M | F The German Marshall Fund of the United States
STRENGTHENING TRANSATLANTIC COOPERATION

Our Organization | Our Work | Our Events | Our Experts | GMFUS.org

GMF's World Wire

January 27, 2016

National Defense and Security Strategies Offer Building Blocks for a European Defense Strategy

Claudia Major & Christian Mölling
Momentum is growing behind a European defense strategy. The violent conflict to Europe's east and south, as well as terrorist attacks at home, have underlined that the role of military power in international affairs, specifically in Europe's neighborhood, is growing again.

READ MORE

Turkey and Russia's Proxy War and the Kurds

Gökhan Bacik
Russia and Turkey are not only following different paths in regional politics, but their policies are mutually detrimental. Also new on the subject: "Pride and Pragmatism."

READ MORE

Ruble Dips to New Lows, but Moscow is Managing

Christopher Miller
From the Russian government's perspective, the depreciation of the ruble over the past week from 75 down toward 80 to the dollar is actually a positive move.

READ MORE

Tweet of the Week

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

@etuncalp :
Sobering @gmfus analysis by @ntsafos - Israeli Gas: Too Soon to Declare Victory https://t.co/M08BJyoy83

RETWEET

The People's Republic of Uncertainty

Dan Twining
The world has a vital stake in China's success and does not wish the country to suffer economic shock, violent political upheaval, or foreign military conflict.

READ MORE

Young Transatlantic Network in Belgrade

GMF and the Balkan Trust for Democracy are opening a new chapter of GMF's Young Transatlantic Network (YTN) in Belgrade, Serbia. YTN has existing chapters in Brussels, Berlin, Warsaw, and Washington, DC.

LEARN MORE

Policy Leadership Civil Society

Follow

Strengthening Transatlantic Cooperation

Our Organization
About GMF
Career Opportunities
Press Room

Our Work
Leadership
Policy
Civil Society
Research & Analysis
Transatlantic Academy

Our Events
Major Conferences & Forums
Recent & Upcoming Events

Our Experts
Find an Expert

Manage preferences | Forward email | Unsubscribe | Subscribe

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Michael Werz" <m_werz@web.de>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 11/6/2015 11:20:13 AM
Subject: Ankara police raid Gülen-linked business group TUSKON

Seems RTE made a decision to go all the way. Press repression even worse. POTUS should message @ G20 now that the European are on their knees pleading to keep refugees in Turkey.

Ankara police raid Gülen-linked business group TUSKON

ANKARA

Ankara police on Nov. 6 searched offices of business groups working under the Turkish Confederation of Businessmen and Industrialists (TUSKON), known to have close links to the movement of U.S.-based Islamic scholar Fethullah Gülen.

The Ankara Chief Public Prosecutor's office ordered the search targeting TUSKON's member associations, Anadolu Agency reported. The order was issued by the Prosecutor's Office Bureau for Crimes against the Constitutional Order, the Cihan News Agency said.

The raids were launched as part of an investigation into the "Parallel State Structure Terror Organization/Pro-Fetullah Terror Organization" (Fetullahçı Terör Örgütü), Anadolu Agency reported. The "Pro-Fetullah Terror Organization" was first cited in a draft indictment penned by the Ankara Chief Public Prosecutor's Office and finalized in April. The indictment stated that it had found "concrete evidence" that sympathizers of Gülen were trying to form a "Cemaat state" parallel to the state of the Republic of Turkey.

Police also this week detained dozens of high-ranking state officials and police officers in several cities, as part of the ongoing investigation into Gülen supporters.

TUSKON was founded in 2005 in Istanbul and, as defined on its institutional webpage, is an "umbrella organization representing seven business federations, 211 business associations and over 55,000 entrepreneurs from all over Turkey."

TUSKON has played a role in diversifying Turkey's exports, mainly to African countries and Latin America, at a time when such a move was vital due to the crisis in the eurozone, the largest destination for Turkish exports.

It has four foreign representative offices in Brussels, Washington, Moscow and Beijing.

November/06/2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "The Common Good" <patriciaduff@thecommongood.net>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 11/25/2015 4:16:47 PM
Subject: New News! (11/25/15)

de·moc·ra·cy di-ˈmä-krə-sē

noun - a system of government by the whole population or all the eligible members of a state, typically through elected representatives.

News as of November 25, 2015

Weekly roundup about our democracy and The Common Good community
All of us at The Common Good wish you and yours and a very HAPPY THANKSGIVING!

- Turkey shoots down a Russian jet fighter: Obama, Putin Erdogan and NATO respond
- Obama and France's Hollande hold joint press conference, vow to ramp up efforts against ISIS
- Kerry claims Syrian refugees are thoroughly vetted
- See where the candidates stand on the US taking in Syrian refugees
- Cruz pulls even with Trump in Iowa
- CHECK OUT OUR UPCOMING EVENTS AT THE END OF THE DIGEST

Foreign Affairs/National Security

Russian warplane downed by Turkish fighter jets near Syrian border; one pilot shot and killed by rebel fighters in Syria; the other rescued by Russians: Turkey said the Russians had ignored numerous warnings and violated its airspace, in a long-feared escalation that will further strain relations between the NATO member country and Russia." Ceylan Yeginsu and Neil MacFarquhar, New York Times [More]

Putin: Turkey's shooting down of a Russian warplane was a "stab in the back" committed by "accomplices of terrorists": "Putin warned there would be "serious consequences" for Moscow's relations with Turkey. Russian Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov advised Russians not to visit Turkey." BBC News [More]

NATO: "We stand in solidarity with Turkey." Julian E. Barnes, Wall Street Journal [More]

Erdogan: Turkey's right to protect its borders must be respected: "Nobody should doubt that we made our best efforts to avoid this latest incident… [O]nly Turkey's 'cool-headedness' had prevented worse incidents in the past." Tulay Karadeniz and Maria Kiselyova, Reuters [More]

Obama and Hollande in joint press conference: Both agreed that Russia could play a more constructive role in Syria. Obama said Russia should shift its airstrikes strategy to target ISIS militants rather than Syria's moderate opposition. They also agreed that Russia should support a ceasefire in Syria that would make for a government transition away from Syrian President Bashar al-Assad." Rebecca Shabad, CBS News [More]

ISIS behind new deadly attack in Tunisia: A bus carrying presidential guards in the Tunisian capital Tunis, was bombed, killing 13; Libyan border with Tunisia closed: BBC News [More]

U.S. and France started aerial bombings this week against ISIS in Libya for the first time. Jason Pack and Andrea Brody-Barre of Newsweek explain why this is won't work without bottom-up support from Libyans, and why working towards a diplomatic solution, like U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry is proposing, would be more effective. [More]

Hollande makes the case against ISIS, embarks on a whirlwind tour to ask world leaders to step up military operations against ISIS: He is urging leaders of the UK, the US, Russia, Germany, and Italy to come together in a "grand and single coalition" that transcends political disagreements." Marina Koren, the Atlantic [More]

An unexpected double-focus at Paris climate talks: "Now, counterterrorism is on the agenda. Mr. Hollande…said he could not have imagined the climate summit would be taking place against this backdrop of terror. 'At the same time, I think there cannot be any better symbol or response but to hold the conference in Paris where the attacks took place,' he said." Colleen McCain Nelson, Wall Street Journal [More]

Secretary John Kerry details tough screening procedures for Syrian refugees: including the type of refugees who receive priority — families, victims of torture, and children — and the multiple screening steps refugees must pass. 'It is the most robust screening process for any category of individuals seeking admissions into the United States." Tracy Jan, Boston Globe [More]

New attacker identified as Mohamed Abrini as one of the Paris attackers still at large- and why weren't some of them picked up before the attack? : "As many as 6 of the assailants were Europeans who had traveled to Syria. 7 died during the attacks and 8 were arrested. Abdelhamid Abaaoud, a Belgian militant and suspected chief organizer of the attacks, died in a police raid in a Paris suburb early Wednesday. Mr. Abaaoud planned the attacks for 11 months and was involved in at least 4 of 6 terrorist plots foiled in France since the spring." Salah Abdeslam is still at-large. New York Times [More]

ISIS fighters often on drug, Captagon: "[The drug] quickly produces a euphoric intensity in users, allowing Syria's fighters to stay up for days, killing with a numb, reckless abandon." Peter Holley, Washington Post [More]

Is Saudi Arabia doing enough in the fight against the Islamic State? And is it enough? Adam Taylor of the Washington Post explains why Saudi Arabia's military involvement against ISIS is disappointing Western nations. He also details the tracks and trends of Saudi on the terrorist group. [More]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

If you missed this article from the March issue of the Atlantic, it is still highly relevant and important. In What ISIS Really Wants, Graeme Wood uncovers the origins, motivations, and misconceptions surrounding ISIS. [More]

The Economy

Treasury Dept resists changes in Dodd-Frank: "…The Obama administration signaled on Tuesday that it would push back hard against any legislation that substantially loosens the sweeping 2010 overhaul of the financial system. Republicans in Congress are backing legislation that would soften certain parts of the reforms… They are now seeking to insert the changes into a spending bill that has to be passed by Dec. 11 to avoid a government shutdown." Peter Eavis, New York Times [More]

Good day for U.S. Stocks: Wednesday, the last full trading day of the week, saw U.S. stock indexes rise due to consumer discretionary and health-care shares, which were both up 0.6%. "'The data is relatively mixed,' said Krishna Memani, chief investment officer at OppenheimerFunds. 'I think people are happy that they have a job, but they are not happy enough or secure enough to go out and spend a lot.'" Saumya Vaishampayan and Julie Wernau, Wall Street Journal [More]

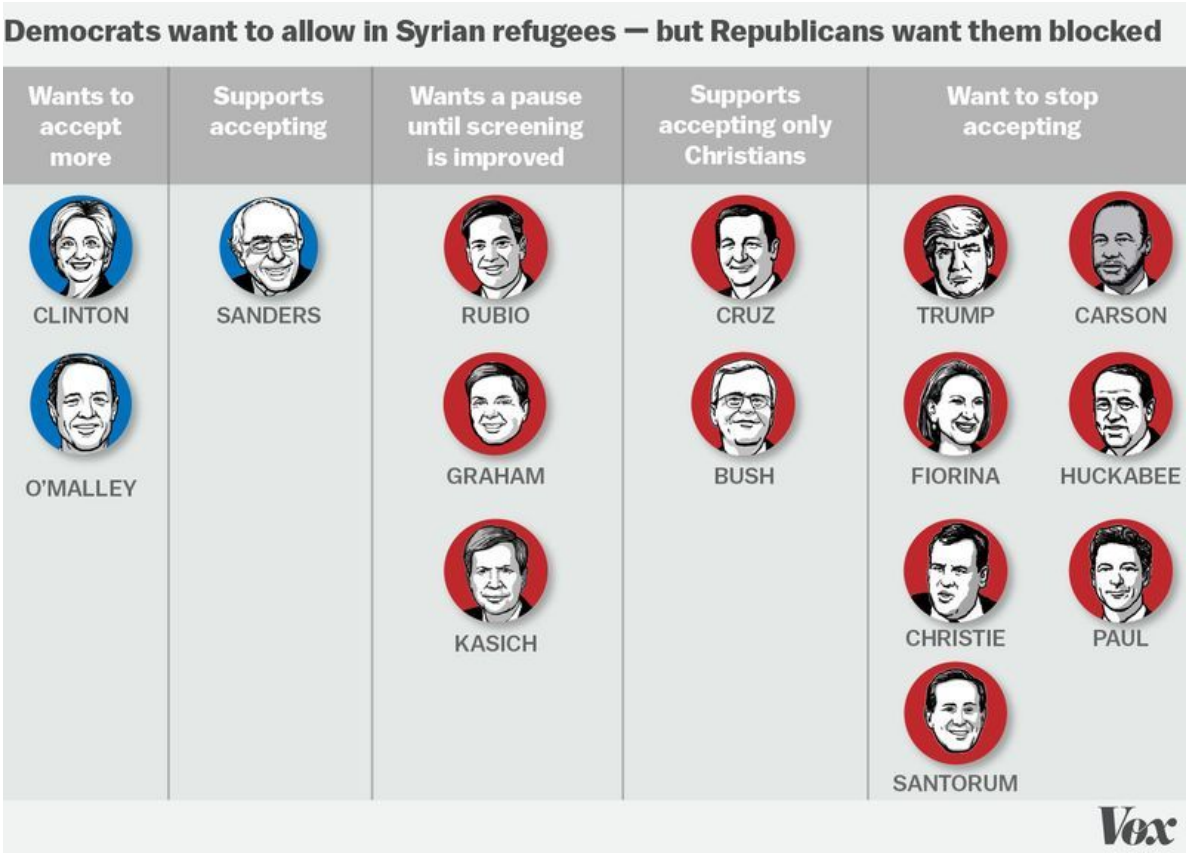
Black Friday in flux due to changing consumer behavior: "…The relentless race for holiday dollars has blunted the day's oomph, as stores offer deep discounts weeks before Thanksgiving and year-round deals in stores and online are breeding sales fatigue… The decline of Black Friday… points to a shift in the way consumers spend their money. 'They're online,' John J. Canally, chief economic strategist at LPL Research said. 'And they're spending more on experiences. A day at the spa, a baseball game, the ballet — rather than a sweater or a pair of socks that no one wants.' As a result, retailers rang up $51 billion on the day after Thanksgiving last year, down from a peak of almost $60 billion in 2012…" Hiroko Tabuchi and Nelson D. Schwartz, New York Times [More]

Poll

IOWA: Cruz up, Carson lower in Quinnipiac poll: Ted Cruz has surged to a virtual tie with Donald Trump in Iowa. Trump 25%; Cruz 23%. Cruz more than doubled his support in the same poll from October, when he earned just 10%. Ben Carson, dropped from first to third, falling 10 points to 18 percent. Marco Rubio is fourth with 13%, while no other candidate registered in the double digits. Politico [More]

IOWA: Not much change for Democrats: Clinton 51%; Sanders 42%; O'Malley 4%; 3% undecided, "virtually unchanged" from Oct. 23: More in-depth: 68% say Clinton is honest and trustworthy ... 89% say Sanders is honest and trustworthy ... 85% believe that Clinton has a good chance of defeating the Republican nominee in the general election, while only 54% say the same for Sanders" [Poll]

2016 Campaign



Split in Presidential field on how to combat terrorism: "[Several]—including former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie and Florida Sen. Marco Rubio—want to keep alive a controversial data-collection program run by the National Security Agency that Congress effectively ended this year... Two long shots—South Carolina Sen. Lindsey Graham and former Pennsylvania Sen. Rick Santorum—have called for sending 10,000 or more troops to the region to battle Islamic State directly... [Hillary] Clinton also sides with many of her would-be Republican rivals in calling for a no-fly zone over Syria and a safe zone inside the country for refugees fleeing the conflict. [Rand] Paul is the only Republican to outright oppose a no-fly zone, arguing it would create the potential for a confrontation between the U.S. and Russia." Patrick O' Connor, Wall Street Journal [More]

How to take down Trump: The goal of convincing a Republican primary electorate that Trump is personally unequal to the job of president is unlikely to succeed… if you want to take down Trump, there is only one line of attack that will work… The task for Trump's Republican rivals is to convince [his] followers that this supposed anti-politician is using typical politician's tricks. David Frum, The Atlantic [More]

Security fears reshape 2016 field: " Trump is proving the effectiveness of using demagoguery to mask other deficiencies...True ignorance, it turns out, can be damaging. Ben Carson ... is slipping after struggling to demonstrate any fluency on foreign policy issues. But Donald Trump['s] 'bomb the st out of them' approach to the Middle East is equally unsophisticated." Eli Stokols Politico [More]

Where the candidates stand on Syrian refugees. Javier Zarracina and Dara Lind, Vox [More]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Domestic Affairs

Chicago police officer arrested for murder in shooting on 17 year old; protests mostly peaceful after release of video: The video shows Laquan McDonald, 17, shot and killed by Officer James Van Dyke in Chicago in October 2014. Monica Davey and Mitch Smith, New York Times [More]

Why do poor areas vote for politicians who want to slash the social safety net?: Popular Democratic opinion states that working-class people who vote for Republicans do so against their own interests. However, Alec MacGillis of the New York Times explains that the problem is more about their disconnection from the political process as a whole. [More]

Victory for voting rights in Kentucky: Gov. Steve Beshear issued an executive order that immediately granted the right to vote to about 140,000 nonviolent felons who have completed their sentences. Kentucky had been one of just three states imposing a lifetime voting ban on felons unless they received a special exemption from the governor. Florida and Iowa still carry the lifetime ban. Erik Eckholm, New York Times [More]

Books & Film

Lights Out by Ted Koppel: A cyberattack on the nation's power sources is likely, and we're nowhere near ready, warns Ted Koppel.
Chicagonomics, by Lanny Ebenstein: Ebenstein attempts to rescue Adam Smith from his caricature as purely for laissez-faire and unaware of the downside of the "invisible hand," but also to change the perception of Smith's modern-day acolytes: the economists who built the so-called Chicago school of economics, chief among them Milton Friedman.

UPCOMING EVENTS:

Ambassador Melanne Verveer
Empowering Half the World
Wednesday, December 9, 2015
Reception & remarks: 6:15-7:45pm; Dinner & conversation: 8:00-9:30pm
RSVP

The Rt. Honorable David Miliband
Fallout: Ramifications of the Great Refugee Crisis
Wednesday, January 27, 2016
Reception & remarks: 6:15-7:45pm; Dinner & conversation: 8:00-9:30pm
RSVP

The Rt. Honorable Lord Christopher Patten
Tuesday, February 2, 2016
Reception & remarks: 6:15-7:45pm
RSVP

Thank you TCG Digest contributors: TCG Staff: Isabelle Lehner and Isaac Getlan, and our interns and volunteers: Samar Nadi, Tracey Pennito, Lawrence Robinson, and Andrea Noel.

Visit our website www.thecommongoodusa.org, Facebook, and our Twitter @TheCommonGood. JOIN IN by sending us your ideas, news, and reactions to admin@thecommongood.net.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This email was sent to podesta@law.georgetown.edu
why did I get this? unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences
The Common Good · 115 East 57th St · Suite 1010 · New York, NY 10022 · USA

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"'Mandy Grunwald' via HRCRapid" <hrcrapid@googlegroups.com>
To:	"Ian Sams" <isams@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	4/12/2015 2:32:50 PM
Subject:	Re: draft surrogate talkers -- responding to day 1 attacks

1. You use the word "focus" a few too many times in the open.

2. I wouldn't call GOP "champions for those at the top". Let's keep "champion" just to describe HRC.

3. On foreign policy, I'd move the women/LGBT point up higher -- very strong in Iowa.

Thx

Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202 973-9400

On Apr 12, 2015, at 9:15 PM, Ian Sams <isams@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

> Hey folks. Here are some points we pulled together for surrogates going on TV -- not a wide blast -- on how to respond to day one attacks on HRC. Thoughts? Adrienne/Karen/etc. can get to surrogates once we're all good.
>
> Thanks.
> Ian
>
> OPENING DAY -- SURROGATE TALKING POINTS ON GOP ATTACKS
>
> Today we've seen a wide range of attacks from the entire GOP field and their allies. Below are some points to respond -- keeping the focus on Hillary's desire to focus on voters while the Republicans are trotting out tired attacks on her.
>
> - Republicans can focus on attacking her, but Hillary is focused on meeting voters and having real conversations about issues facing everyday Americans. This is the start of the different kind of campaign that Hillary wants to run -- one that is squarely focused on having a conversation with voters -- answering their questions, asking them questions and sharing ideas.
>
> - Meanwhile, Republicans want to be the champions for those at the top. While Hillary is talking to voters and focused on everyday Americans, every single Republican candidate has offered the same tired attacks and the same economic agenda that Americans know rob them of the stability they've worked so hard for -- with a top-down agenda that would stack the deck even more in favor of those at the top.
>
> - Americans have responded clearly that they appreciate Hillary's focus on their issues and their lives, so if Republicans want to keep their focus on tired political attacks, that's their choice.
>
> If pressed on specific GOP attacks on foreign policy/HRC's record at the State Department, stemming from Jeb Bush's video or other attacks:
>
> Job number one for Hillary as Secretary of State was to restore America's leadership after it was badly eroded by eight years of the Bush administration's foreign policy -- two wars, damaged alliances, diminished moral standing, no stopping Iran's nuclear program, and no action on climate. She's proud of her accomplishments.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Hillary led the effort to build a worldwide coalition to impose the toughest sanctions in history against the Iranians, which forced them to the negotiating table and gave us our best shot at preventing them from acquiring a nuclear weapon.
- Hillary brokered a ceasefire between Israel and Hamas in Gaza, which prevented a wider war and protected Israel's security.
- Hillary stood up to Putin by strengthening NATO, encouraging Europe to find alternative sources of energy, and called him out for trying to rebuild the Soviet Empire.
- Hillary worked with President Obama to get every major developing country, including China and India, to agree for the first time to reduce their carbon emissions and be held accountable for it.
- Hillary put internet freedom, LGBT rights, and women's rights on the global agenda, and defending human rights advocates on the frontlines around the world.
- And, of course, she was part of the President's team making the decision to launch the raid against bin Laden.

Jeb Bush may attack Hillary's time as Secretary of State now, but it's just negative politics meant to gin up his Republican base.

- Jeb Bush in 2013: "Former Secretary Clinton has dedicated her life to serving and engaging people across the world in democracy. These efforts as a citizen, an activist, and a leader have earned Secretary Clinton this year's Liberty Medal." [National Constitution Center, 6/27/2013]

Jeb Bush is advocating for the same failed foreign policy that led us to misguided wars and degraded our nation's standing in the world.

- Jeb Bush on George W. Bush: "I will tell you that I'm the only Republican that was in office when he was office as President that never disagreed with him. And I'm not going to start now. Why would I do that now after two years? …I'm not going to start now. It's just – 'til death do us part." [CNN interview]

--
Ian Sams | Rapid Response Associate
Hillary for America
(423) 915-6592 | @IanSams
Gchat: icsams

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
To view this discussion on the web visit https://groups.google.com/d/msgid/hrcrapid/CABd81JJxcSiv95x3%3Duc5H1fSQ5M9CZZ0deNmoNAwM%2BHKiO-p3Q%40mail.gmail.com.
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
To view this discussion on the web visit https://groups.google.com/d/msgid/hrcrapid/83838935-4572-4B6E-A21B-479B14BDE8C6%40aol.com.
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Milia Fisher" <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 10/16/2015 10:24:56 AM
Subject: Fwd: ICYMI: Former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright on Foreign Policy and the 2016 Election

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: Hillary for America Press <press@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Fri, Oct 16, 2015 at 5:14 PM
Subject: ICYMI: Former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright on Foreign Policy and the 2016 Election
To: Hillary for America Press <press@hillaryclinton.com >

IN CASE YOU MISSED IT

Center for American Progress Action Fund PROGRESS THROUGH ACTION

Former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright on Foreign Policy and the 2016 Election

October 16, 2015, 10:00am ET - 11:00am ET

"Thank you for that kind introduction and good morning to you all.

It is always a pleasure to visit the home of the Center for American Progress and the CAP Action Fund, because this building houses an all-star team of brilliant people with creative minds and practical skills.

Over the past decade, you have fashioned CAP into a treasure trove of information that thought leaders, journalists, and policymakers can turn to and trust.

But more importantly, this institution has become a powerful voice on behalf of Americans who want our country to be strong and respected, confident and just.

CAP was not created to re-fight the stale political wars of the past; its orientation has always been toward the future.

Yet its purpose today is much the same as it was when it was founded in 2003 – to bring Americans together on behalf of policies that will bring out the best in our country, both here at home and overseas.

I mention this context because it feeds directly into the topic I want to address today – the 2016 election and the question of which party is best positioned to keep our country safe and moving forward in the world.

I should say at the outset that I have some hesitation about weighing in on matters of politics and foreign policy.

For although I have been involved in many campaigns, when I was secretary of state I used to tell people that I had all my partisan political instincts surgically removed.

I have also developed close relationships with many prominent Republicans, including the unlikely friendship I struck up with Jesse Helms when I was UN ambassador and he was chair of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Senator Helms and I disagreed on pretty much everything, but we grew to trust and respect each other. And although it may seem old-fashioned, I still believe that for our democracy to function, our leaders must be capable of forging such relationships across the aisle.

So in some ways it would be natural for me to stay on the sidelines of this campaign, but I have chosen to be involved for two reasons.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

First, I am concerned that there is growing skepticism within the American public about the benefits of U.S. engagement in the world, and I see it as my duty to speak up during this election season about why America must stay involved globally.

Second, I believe that Democrats have an historic opportunity to win even broader support for a conception of American security that stays true to our interests and ideals – a progressive-minded internationalism that follows in the best traditions of FDR and Harry Truman.

The country saw our approach on display this week at the debate in Las Vegas, where the Democratic candidates engaged in a remarkably substantive discussion of the issues – including the question of America's role in the world.

The day following the debate I had the opportunity to talk to voters in Iowa, where I was campaigning in support of Hillary Clinton. It was clear to me that they found it refreshing to watch a civil conversation take place instead of the screaming matches we have seen on the other side.

So even though the general election is many months away, the contrast between the two parties is already well-established.

One party has remained true to its best traditions – the other is becoming lost in the wilderness after making too many right hand turns.

For voters, this has created a choice between a Democratic party that does battle against joblessness at home and terrorists abroad – and a Republican leadership in Congress that sees no greater threat to our future than Planned Parenthood.

When voters look to Democrats, they see pragmatists who offer solutions to new challenges such as climate change. When they look at today's Republicans, they see leaders who still think the best way forward is to deny science.

When voters look to Democrats, they see smart strategists who support the use of diplomacy backed by force. When they look at Republicans, they see candidates who believe that military force is the only tool in the toolbox.

Of course, the differences between the two parties on issues of national security is not just a matter of theoretical debate – it has been on vivid display in recent times.

During the eight years Republicans were in the White House, we saw intelligence misused, professional diplomats and the uniformed military ignored, and the role of history and culture in shaping events disregarded.

We saw policymakers who relied on wishful thinking instead of critical thinking, and who forgot the true sources of our nation's strength.

We saw leaders who were so thoughtless in deploying American power that they ended up exposing its limits to the world, weakening our position in every critical region.

So under Republicans we had a series of unforced strategic errors during the first decade of this century – and America is still recovering from those mistakes.

Yet the Republican candidates for president are eager for the public to overlook this record, and keen to blame all of the world's ills on the "Obama-Clinton" foreign policy.

But we remember that, upon taking office, President Obama inherited an incredible mess, including two hot wars, a broken Middle East, the biggest international economic crisis since the Great Depression, and American prestige at a lower level than at any time since the Vietnam War.

No president has a magic wand, but Barack Obama has put us firmly back on the correct track.

He has rebuilt and strengthened our economy, pursued terrorists relentlessly, reduced the burden on our military, and restored proper balance to U.S. foreign policy – emphasizing not only defense but also diplomacy , development, and democratic principles as well.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Although the world remains a dangerous place, the United States is now on its strongest footing since President Clinton left office, both at home and abroad.

Thanks in great measure to the efforts of Secretary Clinton, we hav e restored America's reputation after y ears of grave damage in the wake of Iraq.

We have strengthened our position in Asia, and built stronger relationships with India and Japan.

We successfully negotiated a bold diplomatic agreement with Iran, one that prevents them from obtaining a nuclear weapon and avoids plunging us into another war in a chaotic Middle East.

We have deployed smart power and placed a greater emphasis on technology , public-private partnerships, economics and energy, and people-to-people ties in global engagements.

The question voters will face next year is whether to build on this record of progress, or take a giant leap back to the policies of the previous decade.

To win, Democrats must punch back with the truth against those who distort the record of our administration and our party.

But we must also make an affirmative case for why we should be entrusted with this country's security, and explain how our party's policies are best suited to handle global challenges in a world that is far different from what it was in 2008, or even 2012.

As part of that effort, we must take into account what I call the Iraq effect.

By that I mean the creeping sense that America can do little good in the world, and that efforts to shape events abroad through diplomatic, economic or military means are futile.

It is understandable that Americans are reluctant to spend time and money solving problems overseas when those problems seem intractable, and we face many difficult issues here at home.

But as tempting as it may be, simply circling the wagons is not an option for the United States.

For history teaches us that sooner or later, the world's problems will come home to America.

While the Bush administration made grievous errors, and the Obama administration has not solved ev ery problem, we cannot use those experiences as an excuse to retreat ov erseas.

When you serve as secretary of state, you are reminded constantly that the world still sees America as a role model.

Our leadership rests on our commitment to democracy, liberty and law, support for justice and peace, and advocacy of human rights and economic opportunity for all.

For us to have credibility abroad, these concepts must be constantly upheld and reinforced at home.

And for Americans to liv e our lives in safety and freedom, we must be prepared to deploy all the tools of national power to shape the world in the direction we would like to see it go.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This requires an engaged and proactive foreign policy, and a willingness to accept some risk.

I raise the subject of risk because I am keenly aware of what is happening on Capitol Hill next week, when Secretary Clinton will appear publicly before the Select Committee on Benghazi.

Much has been said about the Benghazi Committee, but I have a unique perspective on these issues going back to my time in government.

I enjoyed every day I served as secretary of state, with one exception – August 7, 1998. That was the day our embassies in Kenya and Tanzania were bombed. More than 220 people died, including 12 Americans and 40 Foreign Service nationals. Almost 5,000 people were injured.

Nothing in my life can compare to the emotion I felt when I accompanied the bodies of ten of my fallen colleagues across the Atlantic to a ceremony at Andrews Air Force base.

I had often talked about how government officials should be accountable, which is easy enough to do when you are pointing the finger at someone else, but I had never felt the full burdens of high office until that day.

While I knew that I could not guarantee the safety of our people, I had a responsibility to do everything within my power to try. So in the aftermath of the bombings, we established an accountability review board chaired by retired Admiral William Crowe.

In the course of the investigation, Admiral Crowe identified a number of shortcomings in our approach to diplomatic security. A letter also surfaced that our Ambassador to Kenya, Prudence Bushnell, had written expressing concern about limited resources for embassy protection.

I faced many critics at the time, particularly in Congress, but we were ultimately able to work together to increase funding for diplomatic security and implement the recommendations of Admiral Crowe.

My experience in 1998 parallels Secretary Clinton's in the aftermath of the Benghazi attacks. We both took responsibility, appointed accountability review boards, and worked with appropriate congressional oversight committees to try to fix what went wrong.

But with all those similarities, there was one key difference. Three years after the Benghazi attacks, Republicans in Congress chose to launch an investigation – and, as they now admit, its purpose is to inflict political damage on Hillary Clinton and the Obama administration.

It is very telling to me that the focus of the investigation, which has cost taxpayers $4.5 million, now seems to have shifted to her e-mails.

Our country can and should have a debate about how to balance our need to project influence abroad with our responsibility to protect our diplomats and security professionals, acknowledging that the courageous people who take these jobs know there are risks.

What we should never have done is to politicize the deaths of four Americans. This investigation is an insult to their memories, and the committee should be disbanded.

It takes a special kind of cynicism to exploit a terrorist attack for partisan political gain, but unfortunately such views seem to be taking hold this election cycle.

We have seen this administration's opponents do everything possible to derail sensitive international negotiations, while proclaiming that our president is weak because he lacks the phony bluster of Putin.

But most worrying of all is the constant drumbeat of naysayers who argue that our country is somehow headed down the tubes.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I, for one, reject their doomsday scenarios.

The truth is we don't need to make America great again. We are great now, and our best days are still ahead of us – if we have a leader who leverages our strengths as a diverse, hard-working, and innovative country of immigrants and strivers.

That is what Democrats must be about next year – appealing not to our country's fringe tendencies, but to the values that have made America great and our engagement around the world so essential.

This can be done because it is what we have always done.

Consider the Democrat who was president when my family found refuge in this country, Harry Truman.

He never hesitated to defend America.

But neither did he ever fail to associate the United States with the purposes of the UN Charter, the interests of our allies and the goal of helping others.

He had the strength to act decisively, but also the wisdom to lead in a way that attracted international support.

He worked tirelessly to strengthen global institutions and law, but reserved the option of independent action.

He saw America as exceptional not because it was exempt from the rules demanded of others, but because it was determined to create a world in which rules had real meaning.

And he was resolute in defining America not in terms of its possessions, but rather its ideals.

"We believe that all men have a right to equal justice under law and equal opportunity to share in the common good," he said.

"We believe that all men have a right to freedom of thought and expression.

We believe that all men are created equal because they are created in the image of God."

Truman's words, with a little updating as to gender, still speak to us today, a new day in an age-old struggle between hope and fear on earth.

It is a struggle we can and will win – if progressives stand up for what we believe in, and show the country we can lead with intelligence, conviction, and strength both here at home and abroad. Thank you very much."

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "NationalPress2016" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to nationalpress2016+unsubscribe@hillaryclinton.com .

--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
c: 858.395.1741

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Jennifer Palmieri" <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com>
To:	"Nick Merrill" <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com>
Date:	3/2/2015 3:55:20 PM
Subject:	Re: NYT: Hillary Clinton¹s Use of Private Email a t State Department Raises Flags

+ Podesta (for real)

Sent from my iPad

On Mar 2, 2015, at 10:33 PM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com > wrote:

+ Heather as well.

From: Jennifer Palmieri <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com >
Date: Monday, March 2, 2015 at 10:32 PM
To: NSM <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com >
Cc: Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com >, Craig Minassian <craig@minassianmedia.com >, Matt McKenna <matt.mckenna@gmail.com >, Philippe Reines <pir@hrcoffice.com >, Kamyl Bazbaz <kamyl@chelseaoffice.com >
Subject: Re: NYT: Hillary Clinton¹s Use of Private Email at State Department Raises Flags

Philippe and Nick - didn't Condi also use a non-government account? If so, think Nick has standing to go back to push NYT to make that clear and to push them to use all of Nick's quote. It is not correct to say that Nick did not provide a reason for why she did not have a government account, his quote states the reason

Sent from my iPad

On Mar 2, 2015, at 9:53 PM, Nick Merrill <nmerrill@hrcoffice.com > wrote:

It's up.

http://mobile.nytimes.com/2015/03/03/us/politics/hillary-clintons-use-of-private-email-at-state-department-raises-flags.html

Hillary Clinton's Use of Private Email at State Department Raises Flags

WASHINGTON — Hillary Rodham Clinton exclusively used a personal email account to conduct government business as secretary of state, State Department officials said, and may have violated federal requirements that officials' correspondence be retained as part of the agency's record.

Mrs. Clinton did not have a government email address during her four-year tenure at the State Department. Her aides took no actions to have her personal emails preserved on department servers at the time, as required by the Federal Records Act.

It was only two months ago, in response to a new State Department effort to comply with federal record-keeping practices, that Mrs. Clinton's advisers reviewed tens of thousands of pages of her personal emails and decided which ones to turn over to the State Department. All told, 55,000 pages of emails were given to the department.Mrs. Clinton stepped down from the secretary's post in early 2013.

Her expansive use of the private account was alarming to current and former National Archives and Records Administration officials and government watchdogs, who called it a serious breach.

Hillary Rodham Clinton had no government email address.

Liam Richards / The Canadian Press, via Associated Press

"It is very difficult to conceive of a scenario — short of nuclear winter — where an agency would be justified in allowing its cabinet-level-head officer to solely use a private email communications channel for the conduct of government business," said Jason R. Baron, a lawyer at Drinker Biddle and Reath who is a former director of litigation at the National Archives and Records Administration.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A spokesman for Mrs. Clinton, Nick Merrill, defended her use of the personal email account and said she has been complying with the "letter and spirit of the rules."

Under federal law, however, letters and emails written and received by federal officials, such as the secretary of state, are considered government records and are supposed to be retained so that congressional committees, historians and members of the news media can find them. There are exceptions to the law for certain classified and sensitive materials.

Mrs. Clinton is not the first government official — or first secretary of state — to use a personal email account on which to conduct official business.

But her exclusive use of her private email, for all of her work, appears unusual, Mr. Baron said. The use of private email accounts is supposed to be limited to emergencies, experts said, such as when an agency's computer server is not working.

"I can recall no instance in my time at the National Archives when a high-ranking official at an executive branch agency solely used a personal email account for the transaction of government business," said Mr. Baron, who worked at the agency from 2000 to 2013.

Regulations from the National Archives and Records Administration at the time required any emails sent or received from personal accounts be preserved as part of the agency's records.

But Mrs. Clinton and her aides failed to do so.

It is not clear how many emails were in Mrs. Clinton's account, and the process her advisers used to determine which ones related to her work at the State Department before turning them over.

"It's a shame it didn't take place automatically when she was secretary of state as it should have," said Thomas S. Blanton, the director of the National Security Archive, a group based at George Washington University that advocates government transparency. "Someone in the State Department deserves credit for taking the initiative to ask for the records back. Most of the time it takes the threat of litigation and embarrassment."

Mr. Blanton said high-level officials should operate as President Obama does, emailing from a secure government account, with every record preserved for historical purposes.

"Personal emails are not secure," he said. "Senior officials should not be using them."

Penalties for not complying with federal record-keeping requirements are rare, because the National Archives has few enforcement abilities.

Mr. Merrill, the spokesman for Mrs. Clinton, declined to detail why she chose to conduct State Department business from her personal account.

Mr. Merrill said that because Mrs. Clinton was sending emails to other State Department officials at their government accounts she had "every expectation they would be retained." Mr. Merrill declined to answer questions about any emails that Mrs. Clinton may have sent to foreign leaders, people in the private sector, or government officials outside the State Department.

The revelation about the private email account echoes longstanding criticisms directed at both the former secretary and her husband, former President Bill Clinton, for a lack of transparency and inclination toward secrecy.

And others who, like Mrs. Clinton, are eyeing a candidacy for the White House are stressing a very different approach. Jeb Bush, who is seeking the Republican nomination for president, released a trove of emails in December from his eight years as governor of Florida.

It is not clear whether Mrs. Clinton's private email account included encryption or other security measures, given the sensitivity of her diplomatic activity.

Mrs. Clinton's successor, Secretary of State John Kerry, has used a government email account since taking over the role, and his correspondence is being preserved contemporaneously as part of State Department records, according to his aides.

Before the current regulations went into effect, Secretary of State Colin L. Powell, who served from 2001 to 2005, used personal email to communicate with American officials and ambassadors and foreign leaders.

Last October, the State Department, as part of the effort to improve its record keeping, asked all previous secretaries of state dating back to Madeleine K. Albright to provide it with any records, like emails, from their time in office for preservation.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"These steps include regularly archiving all of Secretary Kerry's emails to ensure that we are capturing all federal records," said a department spokeswoman, Jen Psaki.

The existence of Mrs. Clinton's personal email account was discovered as a House committee investigating the attack on the American Consulate in Benghazi sought correspondence between Mrs. Clinton and her aides about the attack.

Two weeks ago, Mrs. Clinton provided the committee with about 300 emails — amounting to roughly 900 pages — about the Benghazi attacks that Mrs. Clinton's aides had found among her personal emails.

Mrs. Clinton and the committee declined to comment on the contents of the emails or whether they will be made public.

The State Department, Ms. Psaki said, "has been proactively and consistently engaged in responding to the committee's many requests in a timely manner, providing more than 40,000 pages of documents, scheduling more than 20 transcribed interviews and participating in several briefings and each of the committee's hearings."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "King & Spalding" <update@kslawmail.com>
To: "Odesta, Podesta" <podesta@law.georgetown.edu>
Date: 10/5/2015 9:09:50 AM
Subject: King & Spalding Client Alert: Trans-Pacific Partnership Agreement Negotiations Conclude After Marathon Session

KING & SPALDING

Client Alert

International Trade & Litigation Practice Group

Trans-Pacific Partnership Agreement Negotiations Conclude After Marathon Session

The 12 Trans-Pacific Partnership ("TPP") countries –Australia, Brunei Darussalam, Canada, Chile, Japan, Malaysia, Mexico, New Zealand, Peru, Singapore, United States, and Vietnam – announced this morning that they have resolved all remaining issues and reached a final agreement on the regional free-trade agreement. If the United States ultimately passes legislation implementing the agreement, TPP will create an integrated regional economy accounting for 40 percent of global GDP. Formal negotiations began in March 2010, and today's announcement concludes the final negotiations round that began last week in Atlanta.
More »

Contact(s)

Stephen J. Orava
J. Michael Taylor
J.C. Boggs
Joseph A. Laroski Jr.

About King & Spalding

Celebrating more than 130 years of service, King & Spalding is an international law firm that represents a broad array of clients, including half of the Fortune Global 100, with 900 lawyers in 18 offices in the United States, Europe, the Middle East and Asia. The firm also represents hundreds of clients with new ventures and mid-sized companies in emerging industries. For additional information, visit www.kslaw.com .

This alert provides a general summary of recent legal developments. It is not intended to be and should not be relied upon as legal advice. In some jurisdictions, this may be considered "Attorney Advertising."

Abu Dhabi | Atlanta | Austin | Charlotte | Dubai | Frankfurt | Geneva | Houston | London | Moscow | New York | Paris | Riyadh | San Francisco | Silicon Valley | Singapore | Tokyo | Washington, D.C.

In some jurisdictions, this may be considered "Attorney Advertising."

To ensure future delivery of King & Spalding e-mails to your inbox, add the domains @kslaw.com and @kslawemail.com to your safe senders list.

Update your contact profile or unsubscribe.

King & Spalding consists of King & Spalding LLP, a Georgia, U.S., limited liability entity, and affiliated limited liability entities in the U.S., England, and Singapore.

© King & Spalding | 1180 Peachtree Street NE | Atlanta, GA 30309 | www.kslaw.com

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Brent Budowsky" <brentbbi@webtv.net>
To:	john.podesta@gmail.com roy.spence@gsdm.com
Date:	3/4/2016 2:10:55 PM
Subject:	For WJC and HRC: here is the Open Letter on Trump from GOP National Security Leaders

I would suggest in the upcoming debate, campaign ad or video by WJC or HRC a laser-like focus on the letter from Republican national security experts warning about Trump as commander in chief. The actual letter text with signer names is linked below. Note the strong indictment of Trump comes from moderate Republican to conservative Republican national security leaders, not politicians, and not liberals. They warn about Trump regarding everything from his support of torture to his praise of Vladimir Putin.

HRC and WJC could do an elevated version of the LBJ daisy ad against Goldwater who could start a nuclear war. I will writing column soon but the Clintons shouldn't wait for me. Use tones that are statesmanlike and commander in chief-like, quoting professional Republican national security experts---not partisan or political language but HRC as commander in chief and WJC who was commander in chief addressing voters in serious waves.

Here the national security letter text, with signers listed:

http://warontherocks.com/2016/03/open-letter-on-donald-trump-from-gop-national-security-leaders/

Sent from my iPad

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Robert Creamer" <creamer2@aol.com>
To:	"Robert Creamer" <creamer2@aol.com>
Date:	2/19/2011 12:43:30 AM
Subject:	[big campaign] New Huff Post from Creamer-Wisconsin Governor's Attack on Labor May Backfire on Radical Right

Wisconsin Governor's Attack on Labor May Backfire on Radical Right

Saul Alinsky used to say, "you can always count on your enemies." That may turn out to be true in the case of the Wisconsin Governor's attack on the right of state workers to choose a union.

Scott Walker's plan was a blitzkrieg attack that would catch the opposition with its defenses down, like Germany's attack on Russia at the beginning of World War II. His goal was to emasculate the ability of public service employees to negotiate with the state over their salaries and working conditions, and begin the destruction of the unions that represent public sector workers all over America Wisconsin was to be the first state to fall. Then other states with radical right Governors – like Ohio and Indiana – would follow suit.

Well, the first casualty of war is the plan. Turns out that – at least for now – Walker's expectation of a lightning-fast victory has been thwarted by a determined Democratic Senate caucus that left the state and denied the Senate a quorum. But just as importantly, the right's entire nationwide plan has been put in jeopardy by the fact that when the alarm sounded, everyday citizens throughout Wisconsin and around the nation, answered the call

All week, tens of thousands of people from every walk of life have swarmed the Wisconsin State Capitol in Madison. Retirees have set up camp, and kids and teachers have left high schools to join in the protests.

Walker's move has succeeded in launching a movement to defend the rights of Americans to choose a union. Not exactly what the radical right had in mind.

Of course, a large turnout at an event does not necessarily translate into a movement. Movements have three defining characteristics that make them explosive:

1). When an organized protest – or political campaign – morphs into a movement, the organizers no longer find it necessary to mobilize individuals or groups one at a time. Like nuclear fission, movements involve chain reactions. One person mobilizes his or her neighbor – who then mobilizes his or her neighbor – and so on. What happened in Egypt was a genuine movement. Mobilization swept the country like wildfire through a spontaneous process of chain reaction.

2). That kind of spontaneous chain reaction is only possible because the issues involved in the conflict around which the movement is organized takes on a moral character. The conflict is no longer solely about specific, concrete matters – like wages or health care coverage. The battle becomes a conflict over values – over right and wrong. Instead of being entirely transactional, they become transformational.

3). It's hard to "launch" a movement intentionally, the way you launch an issue or electoral campaign. A "precipitating event" is always required to touch them off. The conditions for a movement can be ripe for years – yet no movement occurs. Then suddenly an event causes an eruption. It's as if there is gasoline spread all across the ground and there is no fire – until one day someone tosses out a match.

In Tunisia that precipitating event was the self-immolation of a fruit peddler. In Egypt it was the uprising in Tunisia. In Wisconsin it has been Governor Walker's sudden attempt to destroy collective bargaining in a week's time. Walker's move challenged a basic American value – the right to collective bargaining. It seemed outrageous to everyday people because it sought to overturn half a century of labor relations in Wisconsin in a week, without public debate, and without the opportunity for the public to express their views.

For many years, Wall Street and its allies on the right have tried to portray labor as just another "special interest." The movement that has followed Walker's outrageous action has redefined the right to collective bargaining for what is – as a moral question, a question of human rights. It has transformed the frame through which ordinary people view the labor movement. Instead of "big labor" focused only on wages and working conditions, it has once again become a "movement" for social and economic justice – a movement that inspires our belief that we can take the future into our own hands – that a truly democratic society is in fact a possibility.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The labor movement in Wisconsin – and the Democratic Senators who have stood their ground – have become heroic figures.

For three decades Wall Street – and the top 2% of Americans -- have sopped up every dime of economic growth that has resulted from the increased productivity of American workers. Often those in that top 2% don't even work for a living – or if they do, they don't produce a good or service. Instead they speculate for a living – they gamble with other people's money – they spend their time scheming about how they can get richer, not how they can produce a better product.

As a result the American middle class is in real danger – and most Americans know it. That has turned the electorate into a combustible mixture. Walker's action may very well have provided the match to help set off a movement among ordinary citizens who see the right to collective bargaining as the way out. That, of course, would be absolutely correct. The only way that everyday people will share systematically in the fruits of their ever-more productive work is through collective bargaining that demands their fair share.

I suspect that's not exactly what Walker and his gang of right wing ideologues had in mind either. But if the movement to support the right to choose a union continues to explode the way it has this week, that is exactly what they will get.

Robert Creamer is a long-time political organizer and strategist, and author of the book: Stand Up Straight: How Progressives Can Win, available on Amazon.com.

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/robert-creamer/wisconsin-governors-attac_b_825487.html

--

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail dubois.sara@gmail.com with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Alexandria Phillips" <aphillips@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	aphillips@hillaryclinton.com
Date:	5/31/2015 2:03:37 AM
Subject:	H4A News Clips 5.31.15
Attachments:	H4A Clips 5.31.15.docx

H4A Press Clips

May 31, 2015

SUMMARY OF TODAY'S NEWS

Vice President Biden's son Beau Biden passed away yesterday after battling brain cancer, he was 46 years old.

In political news, Martin O'Malley announced his candidacy for the 2016 presidential race.

Politico released a piece about Hillary Clinton's campaign obtaining access to the full Ready for Hillary email list late last week. And said the list is a data gold mine that will immediately bolster the Democratic front-runner's fundraising and organizing efforts.

SUMMARY OF TODAY'S NEWS..... 1
TODAY'S KEY STORIES..... 2

Hillary Clinton campaign scores Ready for Hillary email list // Politico // Annie Karni - May 30, 2015 2

People are going to be just as excited': Clinton courts Obama's black southern stronghold // Guardian // Sabrina Siddiqui - May 30, 2015..... 3

HRC NATIONAL COVERAGE..... 8

Who are the 1 percent who've never heard of Hillary? // Politico // Ben Schreckinger - May 30, 2015 9

Can 2016 Republicans top Hillary on issue No. 1 — the economy? // NY Post // Editorial Board - May 29, 2015..... 9

Hillary's Libya Emails // The Weekly Standard // Stephen F. Hayes - May 30, 2015..... 10

That day should come sooner rather than later. Hillary's Libya Emails // The Weekly Standard // Stephen F. Hayes - May 30, 2015..... 13

OTHER DEMOCRATS NATIONAL COVERAGE..... 16

Analysis: Martin O'Malley Is Hillary Clinton's Strongest Rival, But He's Still Behind Her // NBC News // PERRY BACON JR – May 31, 2015..... 16

Former Md. Gov. O'Malley jumps into 2016 Democratic race // AP // Ken Thomas and Catherine Lucey - May 30, 2015..... 18

O'Malley announces presidential bid, visits Davenport // Quad City Times // Jeff Cook - May 30, 2015 20

O' Malley Makes Iowa First Stop in 2016 Kick Off // AP // May 30, 2015..... 22

O'Malley's challenge to Clinton: Ideological or generational? Or both? // WaPo // Dan Balz - May 29, 2015 22

O'Malley announcement remarks as prepared for delivery // WaPo // Martin O'Malley - May 29, 2015 23

Former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley Announces 2016 White House Bid // WSJ // Scott Calvert - May 30, 2015..... 30

Martin O'Malley Phoned Hillary Clinton Ahead of His Presidential Launch // TIME // Kathleen Lange - May 30,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

2015..... 33

O'Malley's long-shot bid gets complicated start // Politico // Ben Schreckinger - May 30, 2015..... 34

Martin O'Malley Delivers Powerful Campaign Kickoff Speech // Bloomberg // Mark Halperin - May 29, 2015 34

Baltimore's blight puts O'Malley on defensive in bid for presidency // WaPo // Robert McCartney - May 30, 2015..... 35

Martin O'Malley Announces Presidential Campaign, Pushing Image of Vitality // NYT // Maggie Haberman - May 30, 2015..... 39

Think big, make political revolution // Waterloo-Cedar Falls Courier // James Lynch - May 30, 2015 42

Bernie Sanders in Iowa City: Think big, make political // The Gazette // James Q. Lynch - May 30, 2015 43

Lincoln Chafee to announce presidential run on June 3 // Politico // Ben Schreckinger and Jonathan Topaz - May 30, 2015..... 45

Democrats Seek a Richer Roster to Match G.O.P. // NYT // Eric Lichtblau and Nicholas Confessore - May 30, 2015..... 46

GOP..... 50

Sen. Rand Paul: Tomorrow I Will Stop the Illegal NSA Spying // TIME // Sen. Rand Paul - May 30, 3015 50

Sen. Rand Paul Vows to Prevent Senate From Extending Patriot Act // WSJ // Kristina Peterson and Carole E. Lee - May 30, 2015..... 52

Walker maintains popularity with 7-point lead // Des Moines Register // Jennifer Jacob - May 30, 2015 55

Fiorina gains in favorability // Des Moines Register // Jennifer Jacobs - May 30, 2015..... 58

Christie to pull New Jersey from Common Core // The Hill // Jonathan Easley - May 30, 2015..... 58

TOP NEWS..... 60

DOMESTIC..... 60

Joe Biden's son, Beau, dies of brain cancer // Reuters // May 30, 2015..... 60

Patriot Act Deadline Forces Rare Sunday Senate Session // RCP // James Arkin - May 30, 2015.... 61

Former House Speaker Dennis Hastert accused of hiding sex abuse of former student // Richard A. Serrano and Katherine Skiba - LAT // May 30, 2015..... 63

U.S. judge grills lawyer defending Obama's healthcare law changes // Reuters // Lindsay Dunsmuir - May 28, 2015..... 65

U.S. Economy Contracted 0.7% in First Quarter // NYT // Nelson D. Schwartz - May 29, 2015..... 66

INTERNATIONAL..... 69

U.S. Says China has Artillery on Artificial Islands // AP // Lolita Baldor - May 29, 2015..... 69

Chinese Security Laws Elevate the Party and Stifle Dissent. Mao Would Approve // NYT // Edward Wong - May 30, 2015..... 71

Islamic State claims militants carried out twin blasts at Baghdad hotels // WaPo // Mustafa Salim and Loveday Morris - May 30, 2015..... 74

OPINIONS/EDITORIALS/BLOGS..... 76

Why Baltimore Blew Up // Rolling Stone // Matt Taibbi - May 26, 2015..... 76

It's Not Closing Time on American Exceptionalism // RCP // Jay Timmons - May 30, 2015..... 88

TODAY'S KEY STORIES

Hillary Clinton campaign scores Ready for Hillary email list // Politico // Annie Karni - May 30, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign late last week obtained access to the full Ready for Hillary email list, a data gold mine that will immediately bolster the Democratic front-runner's fundraising and organizing efforts.

The campaign gained entry to the independent super PAC's list through a swap with another independent group, a Democrat with knowledge of the list told POLITICO, and is expected to begin emailing it immediately. The source declined to identify the other group.

Access to the list of close to 4 million names came after senior campaign officials admitted they were relying in part on an outdated supporter list from 2008. For two years, Ready for Hillary's primary purpose was to create a plug-and-play list of supporter names, with contact information, that represented an energized base of people who could be tapped for money or volunteering.

People are going to be just as excited': Clinton courts Obama's black southern stronghold // Guardian // Sabrina Siddiqui - May 30, 2015

On and off the campaign trail in the Carolinas, voters say they have 'no hard feelings' toward Hillary Clinton. They say the opposite about Republicans

Bryan Burns could not make up his mind. Here was this African-American voter in khaki shorts, a v-neck T-shirt and black-rimmed eyeglasses, browsing shops at the Crabtree Valley Mall, on a swelteringly hot Friday in the not-yet summer of the American south.

And there was Hillary Clinton, who needs to win the minds of exactly this kind of southerner, a 30-year-old Virginia native who has spent the last decade living in North Carolina, a state that all but ended Clinton's 2008 presidential run against Barack Obama. Although he follows politics closely, Burns is not yet fully engaged in the next – the current – contest for the American presidency, despite around-the-clock election coverage by the media, despite Clinton already courting people like him around the country.

As he juggled several shopping bags on his way toward another department store, Burns was unsure but knew this: Clinton's ultimate image – that of a strong woman – should resonate with the crucial black vote in the Carolinas, potentially helping her to secure enough early momentum in the critical primary state of South Carolina to make the old battleground of North Carolina competitive again.

Not that Republicans stand much of a chance with people like Bryan Burns to begin with.

"She has a history of advocating on behalf of what she believes in and, from a pure historic standpoint, it'd be great if she won," Burns told the Guardian of Clinton, insisting that Republicans had made few inroads with black voters since Obama took office. "I still see them as catering to their base. Some of the candidates that have come out – Ben Carson, Ted Cruz and Marco Rubio – they can branch out into those demographics that [Republicans] haven't tried to before, but I don't know if it'll stick."

On a swing back to South Carolina on Wednesday, Clinton set out to recapture the support of black female voters – a coalition that twice helped propel Obama to the White House – by sticking to her message with a touch of Southern drawl. Eight years ago, Clinton developed a thorny relationship with black voters her amid a grueling and bitterly contested primary with Obama that was roiled by racial tensions. This time around, the Clinton camp is acting aggressively fast to make sure things turn out differently.

From the moment Clinton declared her second presidential bid last month, the question of whether black voters would re-embrace her has loomed well beyond her small campaign gatherings with mostly white and Hispanic business leaders. But her activities in South Carolina, in many ways, served as a microcosm for how Clinton plans to woo African Americans – especially those who are women.

Before opening up her frontrunner campaign next month with rallies in New York and policy speeches across more swing states, Clinton continued her around-the-table sit-down style with minority women small-business owners and a keynote speech before a group of roughly 200 Democrats, most of them African-American women, in which she spotlighted women's economic issues such as equal pay for equal work and pay transparency.

Later, at a local bakery, the former secretary of state stumbled upon a pastor, Frederick Donnie Hunt, who was reviewing Corinthians 13 for Bible study. Clinton, a devout Methodist, talked scripture. She spoke of a preacher friend who sends mini-sermons almost daily, leaving Hunt impressed in. "You have my vote," he told Clinton as she got up to leave, after a conversation that lasted just a couple of minutes.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In interviews in parallel with the highly orchestrated campaign on a road trip through parts of the south – from strip malls and shopping centers along Interstate-85 to a famed chicken-and-waffle joint visited by Clinton herself – dozens more black voters told the Guardian that while they may still be making up their minds about converting from Obama to Clinton, one thing was for sure: African Americans do not see their priorities reflected in the platform of her conservative rivals.

Black voters make up for more than 50% of primary voters in South Carolina, the last of four critical early voting states that Clinton has visited in phase one of her campaign. And while this time she is the clear frontrunner for the Democratic nomination, Clinton's return to the state – and emphasis on her southern roots – offered a clear sense that this time, she is taking nothing for granted.

Clinton already has a built-in edge with black voters due in no insignificant part to the lingering problems Republicans face with minorities.

There are now eight declared Republican presidential candidates and counting – the number could very well double in the coming month – yet few have made early moves to reach out to a demographic that has no favorite.

Kentucky senator Rand Paul is the only candidate who has made criminal justice reform a key tenet of his campaign, telling Republican primary voters during his own swing through South Carolina on Friday that the party needed to do a better job of standing up for minorities. Others have spoken more broadly about the need to reduce income inequality, but at the same time have continued to scorn anti-poverty programs such as food stamps and Medicaid.

"They're not reaching out. They're not showing they want to do something for the everyday American," said Eugene Phillips, 68, a meat cutter at the discount grocery store Save-A-Lot in Columbia. "There's people out there who are making $13,000 or $14,000 a year – they're struggling, and they're on food stamps. Republicans don't want to give those people a break. They want to cut everything. They want to take money away from the weakest people."

Sean S, a 25-year-old truck driver, had a similar view of the Grand Old Party. Sitting at the food court inside Columbiana Center, a shopping mall about 10 minutes from where Clinton held her events on Wednesday, the father of two said it was too early for him to decide how he would vote next year.

Most Republicans believe, 'I make my money so I should keep my money'

Sean S, truck driver, 25

"I'm concerned about health care and trying to help the person that doesn't have the opportunity to help themselves. But I know that most Republicans believe, 'I make my money so I should keep my money,'" Sean said. "The Democrats, they do a better job being about helping people."

Jonita I, a sales associate at a clothing boutique back at the same mall, invoked recent riots in Baltimore over the police killing of Freddie Gray, an unarmed black man, and said the demonstrations had just as much to do with inner-city poverty.

"People are mad, especially minorities and people on welfare that may not have the opportunities that more wealthy individuals do," said Jonita, 24, who voted for Obama and is leaning toward supporting Clinton. "Republicans should put emphasis on their needs. ... The rich or even the middle class are not struggling the same way or wondering where their next meal is going to come from."

Such comments serve as a sobering reality for the Republican party's future, even two years after a scathing autopsy of the 2012 election commissioned by the Republican National Committee called for greater inclusion of minorities. Among the recommendations in the 97-page report were for Republicans to establish a presence in African-American communities, historically black colleges and universities, and at black organizations such as the NAACP.

"We are never going to win over voters who are not asked for their support. Too many African-American voters have gotten in the habit of supporting Democrats without hearing anyone in their community making a case to the contrary," the report said.

Despite gains in the 2014 midterm elections that helped Republicans regain control of Congress, roughly 90% of African Americans voted Democratic last November. And there is little evidence thus far that the population will be within the GOP's reach in 2016 – a handicap that could haunt the party even in their southern stronghold.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In North Carolina, the left-leaning Center for American Progress projected that the black population will move from 22% to 22.7% of the vote. If racial and ethnic groups turn out at the same levels they did in 2012, the odds are once again stacked against Republicans.

There's a lot of racism that people don't believe is going on – it's been going on, but now you can see it

Anthony Jefferson, 29, electronics retailer

It will be at least a year before states like North Carolina come into play, as candidates invest both their time and resources on the early voting states that will decide the primaries. But prospective black voters in the Durham-Raleigh area – many of whom voted for Obama twice – are already warming up to the idea of supporting Clinton.

Anthony Jefferson, a 29-year-old from a neighboring suburb who works at an electronics kiosk in the same mall, said conversations with his peers have led him to believe that voters remain enthusiastic about Clinton's candidacy.

"I feel like people are probably going to be just as excited, because it's a big step for women," Jefferson said.

While he ranked the economy as a top priority, Jefferson added that it would be imperative for any major candidate to address issues such as criminal justice and police brutality.

"There's a lot of racism that people don't believe is going on – it's been going on, but now you can see it on social media," he said. "It's definitely a problem."

'Nothing that happened in '08 would keep me from supporting her now,' said a local city councilwoman.

Even though Clinton's reputation among black voters appears to be on solid ground, her campaign has already made a number of aggressive moves to lock in early support within the African-American community.

The campaign on Thursday tapped a former executive director to the influential Congressional Black Caucus to lead its African-American outreach. And just last month, Clinton focused the first major speech of her campaign, at Columbia University in New York, on criminal justice reform amid the riots in Baltimore.

The moment could have proved awkward for Clinton, given former president Bill Clinton's enactment of tough-on-crime policies that saw the black prison population grow by more than 50 percent on his watch. While she did not specifically mention her husband in the address, Clinton said it was time to end "the era of mass incarceration", drew a direct link between prison sentencing reform and reducing income inequality, called for body cameras for police, and pledged federal funds that would enable state and local law enforcement to adopt better practices.

She even alluded to the 2012 shooting death of Trayvon Martin, an unarmed black teenager killed by a neighborhood watch volunteer whose acquittal the following year sparked nationwide protests.

"You don't have to look too far from this magnificent hall to find children still living in poverty or trapped in failing schools," Clinton said, before referencing the fateful night when Martin went out to buy candy and an iced tea. "Mothers and fathers who fear for their sons' safety when they go off to school – or just to go buy a pack of Skittles."

Clinton spokesman Tyrone Gayle said outreach to black voters will continue to be an integral part of her campaign.

"Hillary Clinton is committed to issues important to African-American voters and earning the support of the African-American community," Gayle told the Guardian. "That's why the first major speech of her campaign laid out a broader vision for criminal justice reform, why she's appointed African Americans to senior leadership positions in her campaign, and why she'll continue outlining proposals that strengthen their families and communities."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Speaking behind a podium again on the trail in South Carolina, Clinton did not emphasize race – even though last month, another outcry surfaced when Walter Scott, an unarmed black man, was shot in the back and killed by a police officer less than two hours away in North Charleston.

Instead, her pitch was decidedly focused on economic issues such as equal pay, paid family leave and raising the minimum wage, although Clinton pointed out such matters disproportionately affected minority women. The speech was well-received by the majority African-American crowd.

Tameika Isaac Devine, a city councilwoman representing Columbia, said Wednesday's address resonated with people like herself who are faced with a large number of constituents living in poverty.

"There are a lot of people who just can't seem to make ends meet," said Devine, who supported Obama in 2008 but said there are "no hard feelings" for Clinton at this stage.

"Honestly to me, it was just politics. Nothing that happened in '08 would keep me from supporting her now," Devine said.

Even so, Clinton used her speech this week – ahead of a more openly public schedule beginning in June, with her husband in tow – to highlight the relationship she developed with Obama after their contentious primary eight years ago.

The Clintons had always shared a positive relationship with African Americans, to the extent that Bill Clinton was even referred to as "the first black president". But he came under fire while campaigning for his wife in 2008 for appearing dismissive of Obama's candidacy.

"Give me a break. This whole thing's the biggest fairy tale I've ever seen," Bill Clinton said at the time, angering leaders in the African American community even as he insisted the remark had only to do with Obama's stance on the Iraq war.

On Wednesday, Clinton raised the issue indirectly herself – with a laugh.

"Some of you may remember we had a pretty vigorous campaign in 2008," Clinton said, before recounting the story of how she initially declined Obama's offer to serve as his secretary of state.

"I say to my husband, 'Can you believe this? I mean, the president-elect has asked me to be secretary of state. I told him no twice, and he said he's not going to give up until I say yes'," Clinton said. "And Bill said, 'Well, as I remember, I asked you to marry me twice.'"

She brought the house down.

Don Fowler, former Democratic National Committee chairman who is close to the Clintons, said the crowd's response to the Obama anecdote was a clear indication that any battle scars of the past have since healed. He said Clinton's attentiveness toward African Americans during her South Carolina swing was nothing short of rational, since their votes are mostly up for grabs in the primary as opposed to the general election, when black voters will overwhelmingly swing for the Democratic nominee, who is overwhelmingly assumed to be Clinton – unless someone like Martin O'Malley, declaring his candidacy on Saturday, gets in the way.

"What she did was not, in my judgement, framed against some sort of wall of disapproval by African Americans," Fowler told the Guardian in a phone interview. "It just doesn't exist. She is very popular among African American people."

Phillips, the meat-cutter, agreed, pointing out that he, his wife, and "everyone they know" plans to vote for Clinton.

"A lot of people liked Hillary and Obama – it wasn't good that we had to choose between them," he said. "Most people went for Obama, but this time he's not running. Hillary is."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

HRC NATIONAL COVERAGE

Who are the 1 percent who've never heard of Hillary? // Politico // Ben Schreckinger - May 30, 2015

But for the first six weeks of Clinton's 2016 presidential campaign, that data trove was unavailable and tied up with lawyers reviewing the options available to the campaign: they could trade an old list for the new list, or rent "a la carte" pieces of the list – like, for example, names of volunteers in Iowa they would need before a campaign stop there. Eventually, however, the campaign decided it was easier to have access to the entire list.

"I could offer about 4 million reasons why the Ready for Hillary list is an important resource," said Tracy Sefl, a Democratic strategist who served as a senior adviser to the independent super PAC before it shut down.

To understand why access to the list is so important, consider the recent experience of Lynette Hull, a 17-year-old high school student from Las Vegas who was one of the first interns to sign up with the campaign after Clinton announced she was running.

A national honors society student at Liberty High School, Hull was quickly put to work phone-banking — working through an old database of Clinton supporters to sign up new volunteers.

Can 2016 Republicans top Hillary on issue No. 1 — the economy? // NY Post // Editorial Board - May 29, 2015

Friday's rotten news guaranteed that the top issue of the 2016 race for the White House will be the economy. The question is whether the Republicans can come up with a prescription that beats Hillary Clinton's message of Obamanomics Lite.

We yield to no one in our contempt for President Obama's (mis)management of foreign policy, a litany of woes in which Clinton is fully complicit. But that's not going to be front-and-center in voters' minds.

Friday's numbers show that the US economy contracted in the year's first quarter. If the second quarter winds up a bit worse than early estimates put it, then the nation's officially back in recession.

Either way, America's still stuck in the "new normal" of an economy that's essentially treading water.

The rich are doing OK, thanks in good part to Federal Reserve policies that keep Wall Street humming, even as Main Street drags. But the non-rich know they're losing ground.

To be fair, the Fed's just trying to keep everything from falling apart. It doesn't have the tools to truly goose the economy. In the end, that's up to the collective will of millions of private-sector decision-makers.

And the private sector's just too nervous — about the direction of the world economy; about trends at home; about the likelihood that any big news out of Washington will be bad for business.

Hillary's basic argument: The economy did great when her husband was president — and never mind that she's already abandoned every position that made him a "New Democrat." Toss in few hundred million bucks' worth of negative ads, and it might be enough.

What Republicans need to demand of their candidates is a clear, credible explanation of why the nation's on the wrong track, and how to fix it.

That means talking about what Washington's done wrong — on taxes, regulation and just plain honest leadership. And what Washington's failed to do — from really fixing the banks to truly caring about the regular Americans out there striving every day.

"Hope and change" beat Hillary once. It's the way to beat her again.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hillary's Libya Emails // The Weekly Standard // Stephen F. Hayes - May 30, 2015

A little more than three hours after the State Department released 848 pages of Hillary Clinton's emails, the Daily Beast had seen enough to render its judgment: "Sorry GOP. There's No Smoking Gun In Hillary Clinton's Benghazi Emails." The subhead: "Conspiracy-minded conservatives, be warned: The trove of Clinton emails doesn't prove much about her culpability for the infamous 9/11 anniversary attacks."

t's the media version of Frank Drebin: Please disperse, there's nothing to see here. Trey Gowdy, pack your bags and go home.

Of course, no one actually believed that this batch of emails would produce a smoking gun on Benghazi. Hillary Clinton has sought to avoid public scrutiny of her emails since before she was sworn in as secretary of state. When she did turn over some of her emails to the State Department, it was Clinton and her lawyers who decided which ones they would make available and which they would withhold. While it might be useful for Clinton defenders to pretend otherwise, there was no expectation that Clinton would voluntarily share incriminating emails, especially now, in the first weeks of her presidential campaign.

Yet for journalists interested in reporting on Clinton's emails rather than hastily exonerating their author, the hundreds of pages released last week included a number of disclosures, some of them inadvertent, that raise new questions about Hillary Clinton, the State Department, Libya, the Benghazi attacks, and presidential politics. The good news: Some journalists are looking for answers. And so are the investigators who work for the House Select Committee on Benghazi.

Sidney Blumenthal is at the heart of those new questions. A noted conspiracy monger and longtime Clinton confidant, Blumenthal provided Clinton a steady stream of outside intelligence on Libya while she was secretary of state. Some of his information was accurate and some of it was not, but Clinton thought enough of Blumenthal to circulate his reports to top State Department advisers, sometimes with notes ordering them to take some kind of action in response. Clinton downplayed the Blumenthal emails as "unsolicited" thoughts from an old friend. That doesn't quite capture the dynamic.

For Blumenthal, friendship with the Clintons came with considerable benefits. Blumenthal had been banned from State Department employment by the Obama administration, and it appears that if he couldn't collect a government check for advising the Clintons, he would collect one from the Clintons directly. Politico's Ken Vogel reports that Blumenthal was paid $10,000 a month as an employee of the Clinton Foundation from 2009 to 2013 and the same sum as a consultant after he left the payroll in 2013 through March 2015. According to the New York Times, Blumenthal had access to private intelligence on Libya because he was advising "business associates . . . as they sought to win contracts from the Libyan transitional government."

The deteriorating security situation in Libya generally, and Benghazi specifically, was a dominant theme in the emails. Clinton defenders have sought to insulate her from criticism of inadequate security before the attacks by suggesting that decisions about security for U.S. diplomatic personnel were made well below her level. There are many reasons to be skeptical of those claims. The emails make clear that Clinton was deeply involved in virtually every aspect of Libya policy; one internal State Department email lays out the many ways she drove administration decision-making on Libya. Was Clinton a deeply engaged, hands-on manager of every aspect of Libya policy other than security?

If Clinton wasn't involved in security decisions, the emails make clear that she should have been. Reports that Clinton received and circulated, from both official and unofficial channels, demonstrate the dire security challenges for Americans in Libya.

It's not just Blumenthal's emails that raise additional questions. An email sent at 9:17 a.m. on September 15, 2012—four days after the fatal attack in Benghazi—by an aide advises Clinton that Dan Pfeiffer, the director of communications at the White House, "has some sensitive items that he would like to personally show you when he arrives." Clinton slept in and missed the meeting and wrote back later in the morning to request that Pfeiffer return to brief her. It's possible that these "sensitive items" had nothing to do with Benghazi. But the request for a meeting came after a flurry of emails the previous evening between officials from the White House, the State Department, and various national security agencies. Those emails concerned edits to the administration's much-discussed Benghazi "talking points" and included strong objections from the State Department's "building leadership" to some of the language. White House officials emailed the group to assure everyone that the objections would be addressed the following morning at a meeting of the Deputies Committee.

An email sent to several top administration officials, including top Clinton aide Jake Sullivan, at 11:08 that same morning is introduced this way: "Per the discussion at Deputies, here are the revised TPs for HPSCI [talking points for the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence]. Let me know what you think." The language in the revised talking points is redacted in its entirety.

Given what we know about the various iterations of the talking points, it's unlikely that these redactions conceal anything not already known. But as that example suggests, what's missing from the emails is often as provocative as the content. On April 8, 2011, Clinton forwarded a Blumenthal email to Sullivan. In the version of that email released by the State Department, most of Clinton's note is redacted. It reads: "FYI. [Redacted]." But the same email was obtained and published by the New York Times before the State Department release, and in that version, the sentence is unredacted. It reads: "FYI. The idea of using private security experts to arm the opposition should be considered."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Why did the State Department—or Clinton herself—want that sentence redacted? That's unclear. And there may well be an innocent explanation. But the note raises additional questions. Did the idea of supplying arms to the Libyan opposition through private security experts receive the consideration Clinton wanted? Did it happen? Was Blumenthal involved?

Beyond these questions, the Select Committee on Benghazi notes several "inexplicable gaps" in Clinton's email records "during key times of her involvement with Libyan policy." There are no emails between September 14 and October 21, 2011, five weeks surrounding Clinton's trip to Libya. (The committee notes that this was when a "now-famous picture of Clinton on her BlackBerry was taken.") There is another gap between October 21, 2011, and January 5, 2012, "when the State Department was extending the Benghazi mission for another year." And a third major gap occurs between April 27 and July 4, 2012, a period of "increased security" when the U.S. compound and the British ambassador were both attacked.

It's hardly necessary to be a conspiracy-minded conserv-ative to be skeptical of the claim that Clinton—who, by the State Department's own account, drove Libya policy—neither sent nor received any Libya-related emails during these long stretches of heavy Libya-related policy-making.

Perhaps the most important effect of these latest emails is the simplest one. They demolish the claim that we already know the answers to the important questions about the attacks and the administration's response.

There is much more to learn. The Obama administration only recently turned over related emails to the Accountability Review Board, the State Department's internal and highly politicized investigation of Benghazi. And the State Department started to provide the Select Committee on Benghazi with emails from Clinton's top advisers just last week.

This belated, halfhearted cooperation is hardly an indication that the Obama administration is prepared to assist the investigation going forward. The committee continues to press Clinton and the State Department to turn her email server over to a neutral third-party for a thorough examination. Lanny Davis, a most ardent Clinton defender, originally said she would have no problem providing it. But Clinton has since made clear she has no intention of doing so voluntarily.

That doesn't sit well with the Benghazi committee or House speaker John Boehner. And while sources in both offices caution that no final decisions have been made, every day that passes increases the likelihood that the House will subpoena the server.

That day should come sooner rather than later. Hillary's Libya Emails // The Weekly Standard // Stephen F. Hayes - May 30, 2015

A little more than three hours after the State Department released 848 pages of Hillary Clinton's emails, the Daily Beast had seen enough to render its judgment: "Sorry GOP. There's No Smoking Gun In Hillary Clinton's Benghazi Emails." The subhead: "Conspiracy-minded conservatives, be warned: The trove of Clinton emails doesn't prove much about her culpability for the infamous 9/11 anniversary attacks."

t's the media version of Frank Drebin: Please disperse, there's nothing to see here. Trey Gowdy, pack your bags and go home.

Of course, no one actually believed that this batch of emails would produce a smoking gun on Benghazi. Hillary Clinton has sought to avoid public scrutiny of her emails since before she was sworn in as secretary of state. When she did turn over some of her emails to the State Department, it was Clinton and her lawyers who decided which ones they would make available and which they would withhold. While it might be useful for Clinton defenders to pretend otherwise, there was no expectation that Clinton would voluntarily share incriminating emails, especially now, in the first weeks of her presidential campaign.

Yet for journalists interested in reporting on Clinton's emails rather than hastily exonerating their author, the hundreds of pages released last week included a number of disclosures, some of them inadvertent, that raise new questions about Hillary Clinton, the State Department, Libya, the Benghazi attacks, and presidential politics. The good news: Some journalists are looking for answers. And so are the investigators who work for the House Select Committee on Benghazi.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sidney Blumenthal is at the heart of those new questions. A noted conspiracy monger and longtime Clinton confidant, Blumenthal provided Clinton a steady stream of outside intelligence on Libya while she was secretary of state. Some of his information was accurate and some of it was not, but Clinton thought enough of Blumenthal to circulate his reports to top State Department advisers, sometimes with notes ordering them to take some kind of action in response. Clinton downplayed the Blumenthal emails as "unsolicited" thoughts from an old friend. That doesn't quite capture the dynamic.

For Blumenthal, friendship with the Clintons came with considerable benefits. Blumenthal had been banned from State Department employment by the Obama administration, and it appears that if he couldn't collect a government check for advising the Clintons, he would collect one from the Clintons directly. Politico's Ken Vogel reports that Blumenthal was paid $10,000 a month as an employee of the Clinton Foundation from 2009 to 2013 and the same sum as a consultant after he left the payroll in 2013 through March 2015. According to the New York Times, Blumenthal had access to private intelligence on Libya because he was advising "business associates . . . as they sought to win contracts from the Libyan transitional government."

The deteriorating security situation in Libya generally, and Benghazi specifically, was a dominant theme in the emails. Clinton defenders have sought to insulate her from criticism of inadequate security before the attacks by suggesting that decisions about security for U.S. diplomatic personnel were made well below her level. There are many reasons to be skeptical of those claims. The emails make clear that Clinton was deeply involved in virtually every aspect of Libya policy; one internal State Department email lays out the many ways she drove administration decision-making on Libya. Was Clinton a deeply engaged, hands-on manager of every aspect of Libya policy other than security?

If Clinton wasn't involved in security decisions, the emails make clear that she should have been. Reports that Clinton received and circulated, from both official and unofficial channels, demonstrate the dire security challenges for Americans in Libya.

It's not just Blumenthal's emails that raise additional questions. An email sent at 9:17 a.m. on September 15, 2012—four days after the fatal attack in Benghazi—by an aide advises Clinton that Dan Pfeiffer, the director of communications at the White House, "has some sensitive items that he would like to personally show you when he arrives." Clinton slept in and missed the meeting and wrote back later in the morning to request that Pfeiffer return to brief her. It's possible that these "sensitive items" had nothing to do with Benghazi. But the request for a meeting came after a flurry of emails the previous evening between officials from the White House, the State Department, and various national security agencies. Those emails concerned edits to the administration's much-discussed Benghazi "talking points" and included strong objections from the State Department's "building leadership" to some of the language. White House officials emailed the group to assure everyone that the objections would be addressed the following morning at a meeting of the Deputies Committee.

An email sent to several top administration officials, including top Clinton aide Jake Sullivan, at 11:08 that same morning is introduced this way: "Per the discussion at Deputies, here are the revised TPs for HPSCI [talking points for the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence]. Let me know what you think." The language in the revised talking points is redacted in its entirety.

Given what we know about the various iterations of the talking points, it's unlikely that these redactions conceal anything not already known. But as that example suggests, what's missing from the emails is often as provocative as the content. On April 8, 2011, Clinton forwarded a Blumenthal email to Sullivan. In the version of that email released by the State Department, most of Clinton's note is redacted. It reads: "FYI. [Redacted]." But the same email was obtained and published by the New York Times before the State Department release, and in that version, the sentence is unredacted. It reads: "FYI. The idea of using private security experts to arm the opposition should be considered."

Why did the State Department—or Clinton herself—want that sentence redacted? That's unclear. And there may well be an innocent explanation. But the note raises additional questions. Did the idea of supplying arms to the Libyan opposition through private security experts receive the consideration Clinton wanted? Did it happen? Was Blumenthal involved?

Beyond these questions, the Select Committee on Benghazi notes several "inexplicable gaps" in Clinton's email records "during key times of her involvement with Libyan policy." There are no emails between September 14 and October 21, 2011, five weeks surrounding Clinton's trip to Libya. (The committee notes that this was when a "now-famous picture of Clinton on her BlackBerry was taken.") There is another gap between October 21, 2011, and January 5, 2012, "when the State Department was extending the Benghazi mission for another year." And a third major gap occurs between April 27 and July 4, 2012, a period of "increased security" when the U.S. compound and the British ambassador were both attacked.

It's hardly necessary to be a conspiracy-minded conserv-ative to be skeptical of the claim that Clinton—who, by the State Department's own account, drove Libya policy—neither sent nor received any Libya-related emails during these long stretches of heavy Libya-related policy-making.

Perhaps the most important effect of these latest emails is the simplest one. They demolish the claim that we already know the answers to the important questions about the attacks and the administration's response.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

There is much more to learn. The Obama administration only recently turned over related emails to the Accountability Review Board, the State Department's internal and highly politicized investigation of Benghazi. And the State Department started to provide the Select Committee on Benghazi with emails from Clinton's top advisers just last week.

This belated, halfhearted cooperation is hardly an indication that the Obama administration is prepared to assist the investigation going forward. The committee continues to press Clinton and the State Department to turn her email server over to a neutral third-party for a thorough examination. Lanny Davis, a most ardent Clinton defender, originally said she would have no problem providing it. But Clinton has since made clear she has no intention of doing so voluntarily.

That doesn't sit well with the Benghazi committee or House speaker John Boehner. And while sources in both offices caution that no final decisions have been made, every day that passes increases the likelihood that the House will subpoena the server.

That day should come sooner rather than later.

OTHER DEMOCRATS NATIONAL COVERAGE

Analysis: Martin O'Malley Is Hillary Clinton's Strongest Rival, But He's Still Behind Her // NBC News // PERRY BACON JR – May 31, 2015

Throughout last year, then-Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley was making appearances in Iowa and New Hampshire and giving speeches around the country to tout himself as a potential Democratic presidential candidate. At the same time, a group of liberal activists were organizing a campaign called "Ready for Warren," urging Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren to get into the presidential race.

These two developments were related. O'Malley, who was governor of Maryland from 2007 until earlier this year, has been trying to cast himself as the alternative to Hillary Clinton for Democrats who either are tired of the Clinton family or prefer a more liberal candidate. And Democratic activists have essentially ignored O'Malley raising his hand in favor of begging Warren to run, even as the senator keeps insisting she will not.

O'Malley is probably the strongest candidate in the Democratic field to take on Clinton. (Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders and ex-Virginia Sen. Jim Webb are also seeking the nomination, and former Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee is expected to jump in the race as well.)

But O'Malley, like the other three men, is ill-positioned to defeat Clinton.

In 2007, she was the front-runner, but many key party activists and donors were not behind her. A huge bloc instead supported Barack Obama, another group was with ex-North Carolina Sen. John Edwards. And Clinton's vote to back the Iraq War loomed as a divide between herself and Democratic activists, particularly in Iowa.

There remains some tension between liberals and Clinton now. They are worried she is too centrist, unwilling to adopt views like calling for the break-up of large Wall Street banks, as Warren advocates.

O'Malley has sought to court the Warren crowd by adopting liberal policy views, like calling for debt-free college and tougher regulations on banks that were weakened during Bill Clinton's administration.

But it's not clear that Warren herself could defeat Clinton, and O'Malley's campaigning over the last year has not made him the champion of the left so far. Many prominent liberals have either endorsed Clinton, are still waiting for Warren to run or are backing Sanders.

And powerful figures in the party, even in O'Malley's home state of Maryland, have signaled they are not excited about his candidacy. U.S. Sen. Barbara Mikulski of Maryland has endorsed Clinton, even though O'Malley's mother (also named Barbara) has worked in Mikulski's Senate office since 1987.

So Clinton is an overwhelming favorite to defeat O'Malley. But if one of her rivals is somehow able to win a few primaries and make Clinton work hard in the Democratic nomination process, it is likely to be O'Malley.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Why? First, Chafee, Sanders and Webb lack the political skills of O'Malley. Chafee and Sanders both won statewide office in tiny states, with Chafee having the advantage of his father, Richard, being his predecessor in the U.S. Senate. Webb has only won one election — to the U.S. Senate in 2006.

Former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley announces his intention to seek the Democratic presidential nomination in Baltimore on May 30. JIM BOURG / Reuters

O'Malley has managed to reach the top of politics in a large, complicated state where a Democrat has to navigate both a large black electorate and a bloc of white Democrats who occasionally vote Republican. He was elected twice to be mayor of Baltimore. O'Malley then won by comfortable margins in the 2006 and 2010 gubernatorial races. (Democratic candidates lost the governorship in the elections that preceded O'Malley (2002) and followed him (2014).

O'Malley was praised for reducing crime in Baltimore as mayor, but there is now much debate over his record there. Violent crime was dropping in nearly every city in America during O'Malley's tenure (2000-2006). And the death of Freddie Gray, the unarmed black man who died in the custody of the Baltimore police in April, brought to national attention both the pockets of deep poverty in the city and its police force's reputation for using excessive force.

As governor though, O'Malley has the kind of record of liberal accomplishments even Clinton would dream of. He signed a repeal of Maryland's death penalty, an increase in the state's minimum wage, a provision that essentially eliminated prison sentences for marijuana users and laws that allowed some undocumented immigrants to get driver's licenses and in-state tuition at Maryland's public colleges. He was also a key driver in the state legalizing same-sex marriage and adopting some of the toughest gun control laws in the country.

O'Malley has also drawn some top political operatives to work on his campaign, most notably Bill Hyers, who managed Bill de Blasio's successful dark horse campaign to become mayor of New York City in 2013.

O'Malley, if he is able to position himself as the leading Clinton alternative, could truly challenge her in Iowa, which has a history of rejecting front-runners from both parties. He is likely to have a moment in the campaign where he is polling close to Clinton, at least in the early states, particularly if he performs well in the candidate debates.

That said, even if O'Malley were to defeat Clinton in Iowa, she would remain the favorite for the Democratic nomination. Both Bill and Hillary Clinton performed well in their presidential races in New Hampshire, which votes second. And polls suggest Clinton has huge edges among the black and Hispanic voters who will be a large part of the electorate in South Carolina and Nevada, respectively.

Former Md. Gov. O'Malley jumps into 2016 Democratic race // AP // Ken Thomas and Catherine Lucey - May 30, 2015

DAVENPORT, Iowa (AP) — Former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley entered the Democratic presidential race on Saturday in a longshot challenge to Hillary Rodham Clinton for the 2016 nomination, casting himself as a new generation leader who would rebuild the economy and reform Wall Street.

"I'm running for you," he told a crowd of about 1,000 people in a populist message at Federal Hill Park in Baltimore, where he served as mayor before two terms as governor. O'Malley said was drawn into the campaign "to rebuild the truth of the American dream for all Americans."

Following his announcement, O'Malley promptly headed to Iowa, where he is seeking to become the primary alternative to Clinton in the leadoff caucus state. Before more than fifty people at a union hall in Davenport, he touted his executive experience and called for economic reforms, drawing enthusiastic applause.

"We are still in just as grave a danger of having Wall Street excesses wreck our economy again and there's not a need for it. When wealth concentrates as it has, it also concentrates and collects power and we have to retake control of our own government," said O'Malley, who has made frequent visits to Iowa in recent months.

O'Malley, who will appear in New Hampshire Sunday, remains largely unknown in a field dominated by Clinton. Already in the race is Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, who could be O'Malley's main rival for the support of the Democratic left.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

An ally of former President Bill Clinton, O'Malley was the second governor to endorse Hillary Clinton's presidential campaign in 2007. But he made clear that he thinks Democrats deserve a choice in the 2016 primary.

"The presidency is not a crown to be passed back and forth ... between two royal families," O'Malley said. "It is a sacred trust to be earned from the people of the United States, and exercised on behalf of the people of the United States."

He pointed to recent news reports that Goldman Sachs CEO Lloyd Blankfein would be "fine" with either Clinton or former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, a leading Republican contender and the son and brother of presidents, in the White House.

It was a forceful message that O'Malley will focus on overhauling the financial system, a priority for liberals opposed to the bailouts of Wall Street banks.

"Tell me how it is, that not a single Wall Street CEO was convicted of a crime related to the 2008 economic meltdown? Not a single one," O'Malley said. "Tell me how it is, that you can get pulled over for a broken tail light, but if you wreck the nation's economy you are untouchable?"

Aides said O'Malley called Hillary Clinton on Friday to tell her he was running. By Saturday afternoon, Clinton had tweeted, "Welcome to the race, Gov. O'Malley. Looking forward to discussing strong families and communities."

The 52-year-old O'Malley has spoken often about the economic challenges facing the nation and said he would bring new leadership, progressive values and the ability to accomplish things.

"We are allowing our land of opportunity to be turned into a land of inequality," he told the crowd.

O'Malley has presented himself to voters as a next-generation figure in the party, pointing to his record as governor on issues such as gay marriage, immigration, economic issues and the death penalty.

His tenure was marked by financial challenges posed by the recession, but O'Malley pushed through an increase in the state's minimum wage while keeping record amounts of money flowing into the state's education system. He backed a bill to allow same-sex marriage, which lawmakers passed and voters approved in 2012. He oversaw a sweeping gun-control measure and a repeal of the death penalty.

He also raised taxes on multiple occasions — on higher earners, sales of goods, vehicle titles, gasoline, cigarettes, sewer services and more. Republican critics branded him as a tax-and-spend liberal and the GOP defeated O'Malley's hand-picked successor in 2014.

But his record on criminal justice has been scrutinized in recent weeks after riots in Baltimore broke out following the death of Freddie Gray, an African-American man who died in police custody following his arrest last month.

O'Malley was known for his tough-on-crime, "zero tolerance" policies that led to large numbers of arrests for minor offenses. Critics say it sowed distrust between police and the black community. Supporters note the overall decrease in violent crime during his tenure. O'Malley has defended his work to curb crime, saying he helped address rampant violence and drug abuse.

A few demonstrators gathered near the park to protest O'Malley's criminal justice policies as mayor, an office he held from 1999 until his election as governor in 2006. During O'Malley's speech, there was sporadic shouting from protesters, including one who blew a whistle.

O'Malley called the unrest "heartbreaking" but said "there is something to be learned from that night, and there is something to be offered to our country from those flames. For what took place here was not only about race, not only about policing in America. It's about everything it is supposed to mean to be an American."

Megan Kenny, 38, of Baltimore, who held a sign that said "stop killer cops" and yelled "black lives matter," said she thought O'Malley's decision to run was "a strange choice," especially because of the recent rioting. She attributed the unrest to his "ineffective zero-tolerance policy."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

O'Malley could soon be joined in the Democratic field by former Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee, who plans to make an announcement next week, and former Virginia Sen. Jim Webb, who is exploring a potential campaign.

Sanders has raised more than $4 million since opening his campaign in late April and sought to build support among liberals in the party who are disillusioned with Clinton.

In a sign of his daunting task, Maryland Sen. Barbara Mikulski, his former boss and mentor, is supporting Clinton. She said in a statement that O'Malley "should follow his dreams. And while I've already announced my support for Hillary Clinton, I know that competition is good for democracy."

O'Malley announces presidential bid, visits Davenport // Quad City Times // Jeff Cook - May 30, 2015

Martin O'Malley, the former Maryland governor who got his first taste of the Iowa caucuses while working in Davenport for Gary Hart in the early 1980s, brought his own campaign for president here Saturday.

He pledged to fight income inequality, warned Wall Street could still wreck the economy and vowed to work the first-in-the nation caucus state aggressively.

O'Malley, 52, announced his candidacy Saturday morning in Baltimore, where he was the mayor from 1999 to 2007. And he made the first two stops of his campaign in Davenport and, later, Des Moines.

"Over the course of the last 30 years, we have seen in our great nation a growing gap of injustice," O'Malley said at the United Food and Commercial Workers, Local 431, union hall in Davenport.

He blamed "failed trickle down economic policies" for the concentration of wealth, and he warned there is a need for rebalancing, lest there be "pitchforks" brandished in urban and rural areas.

O'Malley argued for greater regulation of banks, against the Trans-Pacific Trade Partnership trade deal and pushed for comprehensive immigration reform.

"We are still in just as grave a danger of having Wall Street excesses wreck our economy again," he said.

O'Malley enters the presidential race far down in the polls. Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton had the support of 60 percent of likely Iowa caucus-goers, according to a Quinnipiac University poll earlier this month.

O'Malley came in at 3 percent, behind Sen. Bernie Sanders and Vice President Joe Biden.

Still, the ex-governor didn't seem bothered by the gap.

"I believe, and I've seen this happen before, and you guys have, too, that the inevitable front runner's inevitable right up until he or she is no longer inevitable," he told reporters.

He said a challenger emerges by going "county to county, town square to town square," talking about ideas.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“That’s what I intend to do, and I think the people of Iowa will respond,” he said.

Tom Engelmann, a longtime Democratic activist and treasurer of the county party, said he thinks that Clinton’s strength in the polls is deceiving and that times have changed for her.

In 2008, he said, “I wouldn’t have had a whole lot of problem with Hillary as president. But now I do.”

Engelmann said he’s considering O’Malley or Sanders and thinks both can still tap into a late-deciding electorate.

Ed Brown, a former Davenport alderman and Democratic activist, said he’s already on board with O’Malley.

“He’s a new face, and that’s what we need in the United States of America,” Brown said. "And I think he’s sincere."

O’Malley, who was Maryland’s governor for two terms, endorsed Clinton for president in 2007, and the two exchanged pleasantries via Twitter after his announcement Saturday.

But the former governor said that times have changed. He said the CEO of Goldman Sachs recently told employees he would be fine with Clinton or Jeb Bush as president. To that, O’Malley said, “the presidency is not a crown to be passed back and forth by you between two royal families.”

Much of O’Malley’s remarks had to do with what he called the inequities in American life.

“Tell me how it is, that you can get pulled over for a broken tail light, but if you wreck the nation’s economy, you are untouachable?” he asked in Baltimore.

He also told of steps he took there to diminish that, including pushing through an increase in the minimum wage and backing a proposal, eventually approved, to legalize same-sex marriage.

Republicans have criticized his economic policies in Maryland, including some tax increases. And the violence in Baltimore in the aftermath of the shooting of Freddie Gray has drawn attention to his “zero tolerance” policies.

Critics said that it led to mistrust between police and the black community in the city.

O’Malley has defended those policies. Asked in Davenport on Saturday if he had any regrets as mayor or governor, he said he wished the state had moved faster to implement having police wear body cameras.

O' Malley Makes Iowa First Stop in 2016 Kick Off // AP // May 30, 2015

DAVENPORT, Iowa (AP) -- Martin O'Malley promptly brought his Democratic presidential campaign to Iowa, offering himself to voters in the leadoff caucus state as a leader who will create jobs and opportunity. He announced his bid for the presidency earlier in the day in Baltimore.

O'Malley spoke to more than 50 people crowded into a union hall in Davenport Saturday afternoon. He touted his record as governor of Maryland and mayor of Baltimore, talking about raising the minimum wage and investing in education.

O'Malley has made several appearances in Iowa this year, has two paid staffers in the state and plans to add more. He made four trips last year and dispatched 14 staffers to work on state campaigns. He was scheduled to speak in Des Moines later in the day.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

O'Malley supporters hope Iowa can help him become the main alternative to front-runner Hillary Rodham Clinton.

O'Malley's challenge to Clinton: Ideological or generational? Or both? // WaPo // Dan Balz - May 29, 2015

"I'm drawn to tough challenges," Martin O'Malley said, "and this one is certainly a tough challenge."

Unruffled in a crisp white shirt and necktie, O'Malley sat in a windowless conference room in his bustling campaign office on Friday afternoon. He was less than 24 hours away from formally launching his candidacy for president in 2016. If anything, he understated the obstacles on the road ahead.

O'Malley is running against the most formidable front-runner the Democrats have seen in many years. Hillary Rodham Clinton currently towers over the field of candidates for her party's nomination, able to amass resources, talent, political support, volunteers and attention (for good or ill) unmatched by any of her challengers.

O'Malley, among others, will test whether Democrats who say they want a competitive contest for the nomination really mean it. At Clinton's headquarters in Brooklyn, her senior advisers anticipate and are preparing for that possibility. But in the face of daunting odds, O'Malley must find the ground on which to fight.

Will he try to make the contest primarily an ideological battle, tapping progressive unrest with the state of the Democratic Party and possibly Clinton to frame a left vs. centrist contest? Will he, as his mentor Gary Hart did when the former senator from Colorado nearly upset Walter F. Mondale in the 1984 Democratic contest, seek to draw a sharp generational contrast, of future versus past, new ideas against a tired Democratic status quo? Or can he make it a combination of the two?

O'Malley said his travels around the country over the past 18 months have led him to conclude that there is "a tremendous hunger … for leaders who are willing to embrace new approaches, to break with the orthodoxy of some of the worn out thinking of our past."

But exactly what is that orthodoxy with which he seeks to break? How much is it the policies of the current Democratic administration, rather than just the Republican economic policies that he and all other Democrats attack? And how explicitly will he be able to show that Clinton embodies that orthodoxy and that he does not?

O'Malley announcement remarks as prepared for delivery // WaPo // Martin O'Malley - May 29, 2015

My fellow Americans.

I want to talk with you today about The American Dream we share…

its powerful history,

its current condition, and most importantly,

its urgent need for rebuilding.

Our nation was founded on two self-evident truths...

That All of us are created equal.

And that we are endowed by our Creator with the rights to Life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

With these words, the American dream began.

No fine print. No expiration date.

All of us are included.

Women and men.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Black and white people.

Irish Americans, Asian Americans, Latino Americans, Native Americans. Jewish, Christian, and Muslim Americans.

Young and old. Rich and poor. Workers and Business owners. Gay, Lesbian, Transgender and straight Americans.

Every person is important, each of us is needed.

In our idea of country, there is no such thing as a spare American.

There is, however, a growing injustice in our country today.

It is the gap between the strong and just country our children need for us to be ... and the country we are in danger of becoming.

For today in America, 70 percent of us are earning the same or less than they were 12 years ago. This is the first time that has happened this side of World War II.

Today in America, family owned businesses and farms are struggling to compete with ever larger concentrations of corporate power,...

Fifty years ago, the nation's largest employer was GM. An average GM employee could pay for a year's tuition at a state university with two weeks' wages.

Today in America, with dreams of college, a decent paying job, and a secure retirement slipping beyond the reach of so very many,... the American Dream seems to be hanging by a thread.

And yet, for America there is always a yet.

The final thread that holds us just might be the strongest.

It is the thread of the generosity, the compassion, and the love of one another that brings us together as One American People.

For over 200 years we've been the architects of our own future. And now we must build anew today.

My father and mother, Tom and Barbara O'Malley, were born to the Great Depression and grew up as part of that great generation that won the Second World War. My dad flew 33 missions over Japan in a B-24 Liberator, and went on to college only because of the GI Bill.

My mom, herself, flew in the Civil Air Patrol at the age of seventeen.

They raised their children -- the six of us -- to a middle class future secured largely by the sacrifices and better choices of their generation.

But they would never accept the notion that somehow theirs was the "greatest generation." For they believed and they taught us that every generation of Americans has the ability -- and the sacred responsibility -- to become great.

And so we must. No matter how long the odds, no matter how large the challenge, and no matter how tough the fight.

This is the urgent work calling us forward today: to rebuild the truth of the American Dream for ALL Americans. And to begin right now!

Baltimore/Economy

Last month, television sets around the world were filled with the anger and the rage, and the flames of some of the humblest and hardest hit neighborhoods of Baltimore.

For all of us who have given so much of our energies to making our city a safer, fairer, more just and more prosperous place, it was a heartbreaking night in the life of our City.

But there is something to be learned from that night, and there is something to be offered to our country from those flames.

For what took place here was not only about race…not only about policing in America.

It's about everything it is supposed to mean to be an American.

The scourge of hopelessness that happened to ignite here that evening, transcends race or geography.

Witness the record numbers of young white kids killing themselves with heroin in suburbs and small towns across America.

The hard truth of our shared reality is this: Unemployment in many American cities and in many small towns across the United States is higher now than it was eight years ago.

Conditions of extreme and growing poverty, create conditions for extreme violence.

We have work to do…

Our economic and political system is upside down and backwards and it is time to turn it around.

What happened to our economy -- what happened to the American Dream -- did not happen by chance.

Nor was it merely the result of global forces somehow beyond our control.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Powerful, wealthy special interests here at home have used our government to create -- in our own country -- an economy that is leaving a majority of our people behind.

An economy that has so concentrated wealth in the hands of the very few that it has taken opportunity from the homes of the many.

An economy where a majority of our people are unheard, unseen, un-needed, and left to conclude that their lives and labors are literally worth less today than they were yesterday,... And will be worth less still tomorrow...

We are allowing our land of opportunity to be turned into a land of inequality.

Main Street struggles, while Wall Street soars.

Tell me how it is, that not a single Wall Street CEO was convicted of a crime related to the 2008 economic meltdown. Not. A. Single. One.

Tell me how it is, that you can get pulled over for a broken tail light in our country, but if you wreck the nation's economy you are untouchable.

This is not how our economy is supposed to work!

This is not how our country is supposed to work!

This is not the American Dream!

And it does not have to be this way!

This generation still has time to become great.

We have saved the world before and we must save our country now – and we will do that by rebuilding the American Dream!

The Agenda

As I look out here this morning over the original "land of the free and the home of the brave," I see the faces of people who have done so much for so many in our City and our State.

Together, we made our City a safer, healthier and better place for kids.

Together, we made our city believe again. We invented a new and better way of governing called CitiStat, and we got things done.

Together, we made our State's public schools the best in the United States. We made college more affordable for more families.

We led our people forward through a devastating national recession. We took greater care to protect our land, our air, and the waters of the Chesapeake Bay.

We passed Marriage Equality and we passed the DREAM Act.

Together, we raised the minimum wage and we sustained the highest median income in America. We achieved top rankings for innovation, entrepreneurship, and minority and women's business development.

Yes, understanding precedes action.

And it took new leadership. New perspectives. And new approaches.

But we believed in the dream,...together we took action to make it real,... and that is exactly what we must do as a nation today.

Our economy isn't money, our economy is people—all of our people.

We measure success by the growing prosperity and security of our people–all of our people.

A stronger middle class is not the consequence of economic growth -- a stronger middle class is the cause of economic growth.

Together, as one nation we must build an American economy that works again for all of us.

That means good jobs and wage policies that allow hardworking families to actually get ahead. That means a higher minimum wage, overtime pay for overtime work, and respect for the rights of all workers to organize and collectively bargain for better wages.

If we take these actions…the dream will live again.

Climate change is real. We must create an American jobs agenda to build a new renewable energy future.

We must launch a new agenda to rebuild America's cities as places of Justice and Opportunity for all.

And if we take these actions… the dream will live again.

For the sake of our country's security, and our country's well-being, and our country's economic growth, we must also bring 11 million of our neighbors out of the shadows by passing comprehensive immigration reform.

Because the enduring symbol of our nation is not the barbed wire fence,... it is the Statue of Liberty.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We are a nation of immigrants. We are a compassionate and generous people. And if we act according to our principles--and the better angels of our nature—if we return to our true selves, the dream will live again.

Make no mistake about it -- our ability to lead the world and be safe in this world depends on the strength of the American Dream here at home. The challenges we face in the world today are different from the challenges we faced in the 1990s.

Together, we must construct a New National Security Strategy and build new alliances that are forward-seeing and forward-acting.

The center of this new strategy must be the reduction of threats. Fast-evolving threats -- from violent extremism, pandemic, cyber attacks, nuclear proliferation, nation-state failures, to the drought, famine, and floods of climate change.

Together, we must craft a New Foreign Policy of Engagement and Collaboration. We must join with like-minded people around the world -- especially with nations here in our own hemisphere -- for the cause we share of a rising global middle class.

We must put our national interest first, we must put America first.

But we cannot rebuild the American Dream here at home by catering to the voices of the privileged and the powerful.

Let's be honest. They were the ones who turned our economy upside-down in the first place. And they are the only ones who are benefiting from it.

We need to prosecute cheats, we need to reinstate Glass-Steagall, and if a bank is too big to fail without wrecking our nation's economy…then it needs to be broken up before it breaks us…again.

Goldman Sachs is one of the biggest repeat-offending investment banks in America. Recently, the CEO of Goldman Sachs let his employees know that he'd be just fine with either Bush or Clinton.

I bet he would...

Well, I've got news for the bullies of Wall Street --

The presidency is not a crown to be passed back and forth by you between two royal families.

It is a sacred trust to be earned from the people of the United States, and exercised on behalf of the people of the United States.

The only way we are going to rebuild the American Dream is if we re-take control of our own American government!

Conclusion

The poet laureate of the American Dream, Bruce Springsteen, once asked:

Is a dream a lie, if it don't come true?…

Or is it something worse?

Whether the American dream becomes a lie, or becomes an ongoing truth that our children can enjoy, can build upon, can live, is really up to you and me.

It is up to all of us.

It's not about Wall Street, not about the big five banks, it's not even about big money trying to buy our elections.

It's about U.S.

It is about whether, together, We the People still have the will to become great Americans.

I believe we do.

My decision is made.

Now you will all have a vital choice to make next year, for the good of your families, and for the good of the country you love and carry in your hearts.

It is a choice that people will ask you about for years to come.

And so, when a child with a world of learning ahead asks who you voted for, I want you to be able to tell that child, "I voted for you."

When you see a dad sweating through another long shift in order to give his daughter a better future, I want you to be able to tell him, "I voted for you."

When you see a mom working long hours at two jobs for the dream of sending her son to college, I want you to be able to tell her, "I voted for you."

When you see a young father who hungers for a decent job to support his family, I want you to be able to tell him, "I voted for you."

The story of our country's best days is not found in a history book, because this generation of Americans is about to write it!

And that is why today, to you -- and to all who can hear my voice -- I declare that I am a candidate for President of the United States….and I'm running for YOU.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

May God Bless you and may God Bless the United States of America.

Former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley Announces 2016 White House Bid // WSJ // Scott Calvert - May 30, 2015

Former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley launched an underdog presidential bid Saturday morning based on the proposition that his brand of liberal politics is what the Democratic Party and the country need now.

"The story of our country's best days is not found in a history book, because this generation of Americans is about to write it," he said before declaring his candidacy in front of several hundred people.

Mr. O'Malley made his announcement at a rally on Federal Hill, overlooking this city where he began his political career as a councilman and was twice elected mayor. Later Saturday, he is scheduled to fly to Iowa—his seventh trip to the early voting state since last June. He plans to attend events in New Hampshire on Sunday.

The 52-year-old Mr. O'Malley faces steep odds against the party's presumptive favorite, former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, but says he isn't deterred by her aura of inevitability or his low standing in polls.

"The presidency is not a crown to be passed back and forth…between two royal families," he said in his speech Saturday, referring to Mrs. Clinton, wife of former President Bill Clinton, and former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, a likely Republican presidential candidate whose father and brother were both presidents.

Mr. O'Malley has tried to position himself to Mrs. Clinton's left. He opposes a pending Pacific Rim trade deal and the Keystone XL pipeline and favors expanding Social Security benefits. Mrs. Clinton has either sidestepped these issues or remained silent.

"Powerful, wealthy special interests here at home have used our government to create, in our own country, an economy that is leaving a majority of our people behind," Mr. O'Malley said, flanked by his wife Katie and their four children, with dozens of supporters on stage behind him. "We are allowing our land of opportunity to become a land of inequality," he said.

Mr. O'Malley is the third candidate to officially declare a bid for the Democratic presidential nomination, along with Mrs. Clinton and Sen. Bernie Sanders (I., Vt.). Other possible Democratic contenders include former Virginia Sen. Jim Webb and former Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee.

A tweet Saturday afternoon from Mrs. Clinton's Twitter account said, "Welcome to the race, Gov. O'Malley. Looking forward to discussing strong families and communities. -H."

Mr. O'Malley is barely registering in polls, averaging just 0.8% in the Real Clear Politics website's aggregation of voter surveys—dead last among seven Democrats.

But marketing agency owner Jonathan Oleisky, who joined hundreds of others for the announcement event on a sunny, muggy morning, said he thinks Mr. O'Malley has a shot at winning the Democratic nomination.

"Stranger things have happened in American politics," said Mr. Oleisky, 49 years old and from Owings Mills, Md. "Just look at Jimmy Carter. Who'd have thought we would elect a peanut farmer from Georgia?"

Mr. Oleisky said he backs Mr. O'Malley for his "progressive outlook" and record in office. "I think Hillary Clinton is incredibly accomplished, but we need new leadership in the country," he said.

Susan Rohrer, who is in her 60s and traveled to the event from the Washington suburbs, said she likes both Mr. O'Malley and Mrs. Clinton. "It's going to be hard" choosing between them, said Ms. Rohrer, an English teacher. She said she considers Mr. O'Malley "more progressive" and might support him for that reason. But her “dream” scenario is a Clinton-O’Malley ticket, she said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Though Mr. O’Malley supported Mrs. Clinton when she ran for president in 2008, he said times have changed and that he represents a “new candidate with a clear voice.” He sometimes plays a borrowed guitar after speeches, a reminder of his days fronting a Celtic rock band called O’Malley’s March.

On the campaign trail, Mr. O’Malley has touted his record as governor in a bid to woo liberal voters. During an eight-year tenure that ended in January, he helped pass legislation to abolish the death penalty, tighten gun restrictions, raise the minimum wage and grant in-state college tuition to some immigrants in the country illegally.

Another part of Mr. O’Malley’s gubernatorial record—tax and fee increases that he said were necessary to maintain services during the recession—proved to be a liability for his preferred successor, Lt. Gov. Anthony Brown, who lost the governor’s race last fall in a major upset to Republican Larry Hogan.

Since his days as mayor, Mr. O’Malley has emphasized the use of data to monitor and improve the delivery of government services, and he says he has more executive experience than Mrs. Clinton or Mr. Sanders.

But his management of state government suffered two major blemishes. In early 2013, federal investigators found that a violent gang held sway over the state-run jail in Baltimore. Later, Maryland’s rollout of its health-care exchange website under the Affordable Care Act was badly plagued by glitches.

Mr. O’Malley grew up in Montgomery County, Md., in a family steeped in Democratic politics. After law school, he married into a prominent Baltimore Democratic family. His wife, Katie, is a state judge. They have four children and live in Baltimore.

Mr. O’Malley has spent much of his adult life in politics. In his early 20s he volunteered for Colorado Sen. Gary Hart’s presidential campaign. In his late 20s he won a seat on Baltimore’s city council.

At age 36, he was elected mayor after campaigning on a “zero-tolerance” platform that held that cracking down on minor offenses can help prevent serious crime. The city’s violent crime rate fell sharply in his seven years as mayor. But critics said too many young African-Americans were arrested for low-level offenses, fueling anger toward police and making it harder for many to get jobs.

Ricky Johnson, a 61-year-old Baltimore resident who attended the announcement, said zero tolerance was a misguided strategy. “That was the only thing I had a gripe with him about,” Mr. Johnson said, praising his tenures as mayor and governor, along with his executive skills. “When he’s in charge, he’s in command,” Mr. Johnson said.

Last month, Mr. O’Malley cut short an overseas trip and returned to Baltimore after parts of the city erupted in riots following the funeral of 25-year-old Freddie Gray, who died of severe spinal injuries sustained in police custody. Mr. O’Malley endured some heckling when he visited the West Baltimore neighborhood where much of the looting and arson occurred.

Mr. O’Malley said he doesn’t think his policing policies planted the seeds for the recent unrest, noting that many of the protesters were just children when he was mayor. Instead, he pointed to societal inequality and a national economy that he says doesn’t work for poor inner-city Americans.

“When we create conditions and allow conditions of extreme poverty to continue and to expand and in a lot of places to worsen and deepen, then that can give rise to extreme violence,” he said in a recent interview. “That was the eruption you saw the other night.”

Several protesters walked through the crowd as Mr. O’Malley spoke. One woman chanted “Black lives matter” and held a sign saying, “Stop killer cops.” Others blew whistles.

Martin O’Malley Phoned Hillary Clinton Ahead of His Presidential Launch // TIME // Kathleen Lange - May 30, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The call was brief and cordial

Barely 24 hours before launching his campaign to challenge Hillary Clinton, former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley phoned the Democratic presidential front-runner to personally inform her of his plans.

The call between the two Democratic rivals was brief and cordial, and came on the same day that O'Malley filed his candidacy papers with the Federal Election Commission, according to two sources familiar with the conversation.

O'Malley, the two-term governor of Maryland who left office in January, is launching his presidential campaign Saturday morning in Baltimore, the city where he spent seven years as mayor.

Clinton and O'Malley have a complicated relationship as fellow Democratic party notables. O'Malley was one of the first Democratic governors to endorse Clinton's candidacy for president in the 2008 election, and was a major fundraiser for the then-Senator. Last year, former president Bill Clinton strongly praised O'Malley's time as governor.

But as he has prepared to run for the White House, O'Malley has staked out a position to Hillary Clinton's left on an array of policies, including trade, Wall Street reform and immigration. While he has largely refrained from directly attacking her, he has made a point of emphasizing their disagreements at every juncture.

On the call, O'Malley told Clinton that he is running because he believes it's time for "new leadership" of the country. Not coincidentally, the phrase is the slogan for his nascent presidential campaign, visible on half a dozen campaign signs around the stage at his launch event on Baltimore's Federal Hill.

The 52-year-old plans to emphasize his youthfulness in comparison with Clinton, who is 67 and one of the oldest candidates to ever seek the presidency.

Friday's call is not the first time Clinton's campaign has communicated with O'Malley. Around St. Patrick's Day, Clinton's campaign chair John Podesta held a private meeting with O'Malley and told the former governor that they were going to take any possible campaign seriously.

A spokesman for the Clinton campaign did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

O'Malley is a longshot candidate for the Democratic nomination, especially when compared to the Clinton juggernaut. Despite frequent trips to Iowa and New Hampshire with all the accompanying press coverage, O'Malley is polling at 1% among Democrats nationally compared with Hillary Clinton's 57%, according to a May 28 Quinnipiac survey.

O'Malley's long-shot bid gets complicated start // Politico // Ben Schreckinger - May 30, 2015

Martin O'Malley's presidential bid has always been a long-shot, but the odds looked even longer Saturday as he officially kicked off his campaign from Federal Hill Park.

The run-up to his launch here could hardly have been worse, complicated in recent weeks by unrest in the city where he served as mayor and the unexpected early momentum of another Hillary Clinton challenger: Bernie Sanders.

At one time, O'Malley figured to be Clinton's default rival for the Democratic nomination. He won two terms as governor of Maryland, winning by wide margins, and honed his national fundraising chops as chairman of the Democratic Governors Association. At 52, he was positioned to make the case that he represents a generational step forward. Yet it's Sanders — a disheveled, 73-year-old socialist — who so far has captured the imagination of progressives looking for a Clinton alternative.

O'Malley's camp maintains that the enthusiasm generated by the Vermont senator — who drew overflow crowds at campaign events in Iowa and New

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Hampshire this week after kicking off his campaign in front of 6,000 supporters in Burlington on Tuesday — is a sign that Democratic voters are hungry for excitement and augurs well for the former Maryland governor.

Martin O'Malley Delivers Powerful Campaign Kickoff Speech // Bloomberg // Mark Halperin - May 29, 2015

Style: Easy on the eyes and ears, optimistic, conversational, and focused. Powered throughout by compelling American dream/working class themes. Tableau of touching introducers and faces on the stage was carefully and well chosen.

Substance: Clarion calls for comprehensive immigration reform and new banking rules. Vague on foreign policy. But suggested additional national goals by talking about his Maryland record.

Best moment: Garnered event's biggest applause with a frontal shot at the royal Clintons and Bushes, a well-crafted and necessary riff to send the message (including and especially to the media) that he knows he has to topple giants to win.

Worst moment: Confusing “I voted for you” closing refrain.

Overall: Smartly written speech powerfully delivered by one of the best orators in American politics. Far from running from his Baltimore record, he embraced it, along with what he did as Maryland's governor. Contrasted himself with Hillary Clinton as more left, more populist, and more of a leader. Saturday morning might not be the best time to make an introduction to America, but O'Malley demonstrated why Bill Clinton tagged him long ago as one of the Democratic Party's biggest stars. If the nomination fight didn't have an overwhelming frontrunner, O'Malley's performance would have been a game changer; instead, it is ringing calling card.

Baltimore’s blight puts O’Malley on defensive in bid for presidency // WaPo // Robert McCartney - May 30, 2015

When Martin O’Malley announces his bid for the presidency Saturday in Baltimore, he is hoping that backdrop will strengthen his effort to become the leading candidate for progressives.

But the backdrop also could be his albatross.

In preparing to seek the Democratic nomination, he has cast himself as the only candidate with the vision, record and hands-on experience to attack urban problems such as poverty and crime.

But the stubborn urban decay that continues to afflict sizable swaths of Baltimore threatens O’Malley’s pitch. The city drew international attention in April when riots erupted in the same troubled neighborhoods where O’Malley had said conditions were “so much better.”

A challenge for O’Malley, analysts say, is that his numerous initiatives for the city — as mayor for seven years and governor for eight — have yielded mixed results.

Former Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley is a possible Democratic contender for the White House in 2016. Here's his take on gay marriage, income inequality and more, in his own words. (Julie Percha/The Washington Post)

The gleaming offices, restaurants and new housing in the Inner Harbor area are a stark contrast to the boarded-up businesses and homes the world saw on television when Baltimore exploded. The sharp reduction in violent crime is offset by the tension with police that was exposed by last month’s looting.

Given his desire to run as an urban champion, it’s no wonder that O’Malley is quick to object when anyone criticizes Baltimore.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At a public meeting in December, a month before his last day as Maryland's governor, O'Malley interrupted a fellow Democrat who faulted the city for the thousands of vacant, abandoned buildings that fill its poorest neighborhoods.

"You drive up the streets of Baltimore City, as I do often, and it is just indescribable what we, I guess collectively, have allowed that to become," Comptroller Peter Franchot said at a Board of Public Works session in Annapolis.

Before Franchot could continue, O'Malley jumped in: "And yet so much better than it was 15 years ago. … A lot of people gave their lives [at work] to make it better." He said Franchot was "30 years late" in sounding an alarm over urban blight.

The mixed results of O'Malley's tenure can be seen in the frustration he experienced in trying to reclaim the city's uninhabitable buildings. The city drew applause for acquiring thousands of lots in the hope of promoting their redevelopment.

But the number of vacant and abandoned residential properties increased by 2,570, to more than 15,700, between 2002, when O'Malley's program began, and 2007, the year he stepped down as mayor to become governor, according to statistics from the Baltimore Neighborhood Indicators Alliance.

View Graphic

Baltimore's recovery slower than most cities

The alliance said the gain was partly attributable to the city's success in identifying vacant buildings that it hadn't known about before. But housing specialists said legal complexities and high costs also stymied efforts by O'Malley and his two successors to fix the problem.

On the plus side, O'Malley won national plaudits for innovative leadership as both mayor and governor, such as for his early adoption of data-driven management. He points to accomplishments such as slashing violent crime, reducing children's exposure to lead paint, increasing spending on drug treatment and drawing young people back to redeveloped neighborhoods downtown.

But the renaissance of prosperity in some Baltimore communities, principally around the harbor, has not spread to many of the city's poorer sections. The city's overall poverty and unemployment rates have remained high — not nearly as bad as in Detroit, but worse than in the District, Pittsburgh, Boston and New York.

A survey released this month by two Harvard economists found that among the nation's 100 largest cities and counties, Baltimore ranked at the bottom as the jurisdiction where children face the worst odds of escaping poverty.

"Any city has pockets of poverty; it's really a matter of the depth and scale," said Jennifer S. Vey, a fellow at the Brookings Metropolitan Policy Program. "The lows are low in Baltimore. … You have deep distress in certain pockets."

O'Malley contends that Baltimore was making better progress than most comparable cities until the 2008 recession.

But his defense of his urban record also poses some political risks. He says the shortcomings arise not from his programs but from national economic policies that foster inequality and from a lack of support from the federal government.

"We haven't had an agenda for America's cities for at least two decades … probably since Jimmy Carter," O'Malley said on NBC's "Meet the Press" on May 3.

Taking a robust liberal position, O'Malley has urged increased spending on cities. He wants to raise the minimum wage, as Maryland did with his encouragement as governor.

"We need big investments in affordable housing," O'Malley said at a forum May 5 in Redlands, Calif. "We need investments in infrastructure, especially mass transit. We also need to target job training."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That approach could help O'Malley in the Democratic primaries, where he has positioned himself to the left of front-runner Hillary Rodham Clinton. O'Malley is competing with Sen. Bernie Sanders (I-Vt.), a socialist, for support from liberal activists who see Clinton as too moderate.

But it would face a more skeptical audience in the general election.

"The problem is that it is politically unsalable," said Donald F. Norris, director of the School of Public Policy at the University of Maryland Baltimore County. "We are a nation of suburbs, and suburban residents and elected officials do not care a whit about declining central cities."

O'Malley hasn't said how much he thinks his proposed investments would cost or where he would find the money. Haley Morris, an O'Malley spokeswoman, said this week that such questions are premature because O'Malley won't unveil a comprehensive agenda for cities until several weeks from now.

Since the riots, O'Malley's record has drawn attention mainly for the aggressive police policies he implemented as mayor. They led to a substantial decline in homicides and other violent crime, but also resulted in a sharp increase in arrests for minor offenses, which alienated poor communities.

O'Malley's successor as mayor, Sheila Dixon (D), abandoned the "zero tolerance" arrests, and critics noted that homicides continued to decline. Still, O'Malley's defenders credit him with helping to start the trend, especially by shutting down many of the city's open-air drug markets

"On one hand, more people got arrest records; on the other hand, murders went down," said Robert C. Embry, president of the Abell Foundation, which works to reduce Baltimore poverty.

O'Malley also drew mixed reviews for his economic development strategy. As mayor, he directed money and government support toward middle-tier neighborhoods, which he thought offered the best chance of recovery, or toward ones that had access to job centers.

Many urban experts praised the approach as a smart use of scarce resources. But critics said it diverted aid from communities most in need of help.

O'Malley played a key role in pushing forward the redevelopment of a poor neighborhood near the Johns Hopkins medical complex in East Baltimore. He did so partly to keep Hopkins, the city's largest private employer, from taking its expansion plans outside the city. He also targeted that community because it had a relatively good chance to prosper, owing to its proximity to hospital jobs.

O'Malley also supported Healthy Neighborhoods, a community development effort sponsored by financial and philanthropic organizations that has been credited with helping to stabilize middle- and working-class neighborhoods that were at risk of declining.

"O'Malley recognized that improving neighborhoods is about finding their assets," said Mark Sissman, president of Healthy Neighborhoods Inc. "He and others at the same time said, 'Let's figure out what works and build from those strengths.' … Is there a college that's important? Is there good public transportation? Are there historic buildings?"

But that progress came with a cost, according to some community activists and business people in the city's poorest neighborhoods.

"O'Malley did well by the harbor, but my community didn't benefit," said Doni Glover, a community activist and journalist who lives in Sandtown-Winchester. "My understanding is that for poor, inner-city black neighborhoods in West Baltimore and East Baltimore, his method, his strategy, was just let them rot."

Sandtown-Winchester was the center of the April protests in Baltimore, which were triggered by the death of Sandtown resident Freddie Gray a week after he suffered a severe spinal injury in police custody.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Perhaps the biggest problem for poor neighborhoods in Baltimore and comparable cities is the shortage of jobs for low-skill workers.

Here, O'Malley drew praise for good management of federal job programs and for protecting funding for public schools. But Baltimore schools remain the worst in the state, by most measures, and it's still a challenge for job-seekers without automobiles to get to jobs in upscale parts of the city or the suburbs.

"He did a good job of managing the agencies," said Peter Beilenson, chief executive of the Evergreen Health Cooperative, who served as O'Malley's city health commissioner. "I don't think a huge amount was done to make jobs accessible in the neighborhoods, which is truly essential if you're going to deal with the Sandtown-Winchesters of the world."

O'Malley strongly backed building the light-rail Red Line, which would improve transit for residents of poor neighborhoods in West Baltimore. But Gov. Larry Hogan (R), who succeeded O'Malley in Annapolis, is considering killing the Red Line on grounds that its price tag of at least $2.6 billion is too high.

In his Project 5000 effort to reduce urban blight as mayor, O'Malley sought for the city to take over 5,000 abandoned properties and prepare to donate or sell them so they could be redeveloped.

The city exceeded the target in gaining control of buildings but then had difficulties disposing of them.

Dixon proposed instead to create a quasi-governmental "land bank" to deal with the issue, but it never got off the ground. The current mayor, Stephanie Rawlings-Blake (D), has embraced a third approach, called "Vacants to Value." It uses a broad array of methods, including increased demolition funding, infrastructure repairs and housing reinvestment.

None of the efforts have reduced the backlog. The reported total of vacant and abandoned residential properties has continued to creep up and was above 16,100 in 2013.

At the December hearing, Franchot said it was "utterly, totally unacceptable" for Baltimore to have "block after block after block" of homes shuttered with boards or cinder blocks.

O'Malley instead stressed the "great opportunities … to repopulate the City of Baltimore." He added: "It could happen even more quickly with some more capital dollars."

Martin O'Malley Announces Presidential Campaign, Pushing Image of Vitality // NYT // Maggie Haberman - May 30, 2015

In another campaign year, Martin O'Malley's résumé and good looks might be irresistible to Democratic primary voters. He is a former big-city mayor whose story of renewal in Baltimore seemed well tailored to an increasingly urban and minority party. He is a former two-term governor of Maryland — and the lead singer and guitarist in a rock 'n' roll band.

But Mr. O'Malley is running in an election cycle in which Democratic elected officials and donors have overwhelmingly focused attention onHillary Rodham Clinton. And he already faces competition from SenatorBernie Sanders of Vermont for the support of liberals who dislike Mrs. Clinton or merely want to see her pushed further to the left.

After a two-year exploratory phase, Mr. O'Malley, 52, on Saturday began to make a case for why Democrats should bet on him instead of on Mrs. Clinton or Mr. Sanders. His argument was both economic and, in a clear contrast with his significantly older Democratic rivals, generational.

"Today, the American dream seems for so many of us to be hanging by a thread," he said, announcing his candidacy before hundreds of supporters under a baking sun in Federal Hill Park in Baltimore's Inner Harbor, with the towers of the city's downtown behind him.

"This is not the American dream," he added, as his notes flapped in the breeze. "It does not have to be this way. This generation of Americans still has time to become great. We must save our country now. And we will do that by rebuilding the dream."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In a speech that gave short shrift to foreign policy, Mr. O'Malley worked hard to tap into resentments rooted in the 2008 financial collapse. "Tell me how it is that you can get pulled over for a broken taillight in our country," he said, "but if you wreck the nation's economy, you are untouchable."

His aides say Mr. O'Malley is a true progressive, one who became involved early on the issue of same-sex marriage, and a scrappy underdog who takes to tough political fights. He staked out early ground on an immigration overhaul in 2014, accusing the Obama administration of heartlessness in deporting children who had crossed the border from Mexico.

But Mr. O'Malley was also a staunch supporter of Mrs. Clinton in her 2008 presidential campaign — he called her ideas "new" then — and he rose to prominence as a tough-on-crime mayor in Baltimore, a city scarred by drugs and violence.

In two years of travels to Iowa and New Hampshire, he has frequently been reluctant to discuss Mrs. Clinton or to draw a pointed contrast with her, doing so only obliquely. He has faulted unnamed politicians for "triangulation," for example, a word associated with the Clintons' up-the-middle political calculations since the 1990s.

Who Is Running for President (and Who's Not)?

It is also unclear whether Mr. O'Malley can aggressively raise funds without a devoted base of support, which Mr. Sanders can draw on, or a raft of major donors, which Mrs. Clinton enjoys.

In his remarks on Saturday, Mr. O'Malley seemed to have made peace with that, as he repeatedly portrayed the financial industry in a harsh light.

"Recently the C.E.O. of Goldman Sachs let his employees know that he'd be just fine with either Bush or Clinton," Mr. O'Malley said, referring to Jeb Bush, a likely Republican candidate, and Mrs. Clinton. "I bet he would!"

"Well, I've got news for the bullies of Wall Street," Mr. O'Malley added as the crowd cheered. "The presidency is not a crown to be passed back and forth, by you, between two royal families. It is a sacred trust to be earned from the American people and exercised on behalf of the people of these United States."

The announcement did not go off without a hitch: Mr. O'Malley's sound system conked out in the middle of a video made for the occasion, just before he took the stage.

His admirers believe he fills a natural void in the Democratic primary.

"Here you've got a clear generational divide, and a lot of Americans think about that," said Gary Hart, a former Colorado senator and Democratic presidential candidate. "They are less inclined to divide themselves in the world between liberals and conservatives, and more between the past and the future."

It was Mr. Hart's come-from-behind candidacy in the 1984 Democratic primaries, which ultimately fell short, that helped inform Mr. O'Malley's thinking about his own race. He often peppers his remarks with variants of Mr. Hart's campaign mantra: "New ideas, new generation."

Mr. O'Malley, who grew up in the Washington suburbs, took time off from Catholic University to work on Mr. Hart's campaign that year. He later moved to Baltimore, married into a political family, became a city councilman and won the first of two terms as mayor in 1999 in a crowded field. He was credited with a crackdown on crime and on drugs.

He went on to win two terms as governor of Maryland. His star still rising, he was often described as a results-oriented policy expert, who signed into law bills allowing same-sex marriage and raising the minimum wage.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But he also presided over a disastrous rollout of a health care exchange under the Affordable Care Act. And his legacy as mayor and then governor was called into question only last month when an unarmed black man, Freddie Gray, died of injuries sustained while he was in police custody here, sparking days of unrest.

Mr. O'Malley returned to the city to walk its streets even as critics of his tough-minded approach to policing — a few of whom protested his announcement — said his policies had created the climate for racial tensions that led to Mr. Gray's death.

Mr. O'Malley acknowledged Saturday that the episode was "heartbreaking," but said, "There is something to be offered to our country from those flames."

"The scourge of hopelessness that happened to ignite here that evening transcends race. It transcends geography," he said. He argued that poverty and drug addiction were killing young white people, not just blacks, in small towns and in cities, but that politicians had failed to respond.

"We have work to do," Mr. O'Malley said. "Our economic and political system is upside down and backwards, and it is time to turn it around."

Think big, make political revolution // Waterloo-Cedar Falls Courier // James Lynch - May 30, 2015

Think big, Bernie Sanders told an overflow crowd that clapped, cheered and gave him standing ovations for his call for campaign finance reform, a single-payer Medicare-for-all health care system, free college tuition, universal preschool and paid paternity leave.

Please don't think small," said the Vermont senator who is seeking the 2016 Democratic presidential nomination.

"Think be big. Be involved. Let's make a political revolution," Sanders said Saturday morning at the Robert A. Lee Community Center in Iowa City. More than 300 people filled the room and more than 200 listened outside.

Mary Pat Cavanaugh of Iowa City was ready to enlist after listening to Sanders speak and answer questions for more than an hour.

"I'm signing up," she said, explaining "I can't live with the way the country is going anymore."

Her biggest issues – and one of Sanders' – is income inequality.

"It's the most immoral. It infuriates me that we let it happen," Cavanaugh said.

It can be undone, according to Sanders, an independent who self-identifies as a Democratic socialist. It must be undone if the nation is going to address a multitude of issues.

"It's our job to transfers that wealth back down to the middle class and working families," he said. "We have to deal with this issues of distribution of wealth, and when we begin to do that we will have the resources to deal with paternity leave, to deal with the mental health care needs of our kids, to make sure that every veteran who comes back from a war gets the health care he or she needs."

It won't happen when the top one-tenth of the 1 percent control almost as much wealth as the bottom 90 percent of Americans and is using its wealth to buy the political process in Washington and state capitols. So he called for a constitutional amendment to turn back the U.S. Supreme Court decision in Citizens United.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Noting that he was speaking in a university community, Sanders called for free tuition at public colleges and universities.

One of great crises facing this country is the fact that we live in a very competitive global economy. If we are going to compete effectively … we need the best-educated workforce in the world.

Hundreds of thousands of young people can't afford to go to college and those who graduate often have tens of thousands of dollars of debt, Sanders said.

"What kind of stupidity is it?" he asked.

That touched Connor McPartland, a recent University of Iowa graduate from Missouri, who sported a "Bernie" sticker.

"I have lots of loans and his plan to let me refinance that hits close to home," he said.

Sanders, who called for an investment in infrastructure to create as many as 13 million good-paying jobs, will need to knit together the Cavanaughs and McPartlands along with those whose priorities include expanding Social Security benefits, raising the minimum wage and opposing the Trans-Pacific Partnership and increased spending on the military.

"I can't do this alone," he said. "I can't win the election by myself. I can't governor by myself. The political revolution means that each and every person here and in America in his or her own way has got to take a stand.

"You are not wasting your time," he concluded. "What you're doing what is the most patriotic. You are standing up for America and standing up for democracy. That's what we've all got to do."

Bernie Sanders in Iowa City: Think big, make political // The Gazette // James Q. Lynch - May 30, 2015

Think big, Sen. Bernie Sanders told an overflow crowd that clapped, cheered and gave him standing ovations Saturday for his call for campaign finance reform, a single-payer Medicare-for-all health care system, free college tuition, universal preschool and paid paternity leave.

"Please don't think small," said the Vermont senator, who is seeking the 2016 Democratic presidential nomination.

"Think big. Be involved. Let's make a political revolution," Sanders said at the Robert A. Lee Community Center in Iowa City. More than 300 people filled the room, and more than 200 listened outside.

Mary Pat Cavanaugh of Iowa City was ready to enlist after listening to Sanders speak and answer questions for more than an hour. "I'm signing up," she said. "I can't live with the way the country is going anymore."

Her biggest issues — and one of Sanders' — is income inequality.

"It's the most immoral. It infuriates me that we let it happen," Cavanaugh said.

It can be undone, according to Sanders, an independent who self-identifies as a Democratic socialist. It must be undone if the nation is going to address a multitude of issues, he said.

"It's our job to transfer that wealth back down to the middle class and working families," he said. "We have to deal with this issue of distribution of wealth. And when we begin to do that, we will have the resources to deal with paternity leave, to deal with the mental health care needs of our kids, to make sure that every veteran who comes back from a war gets the health care he or she needs."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It won't happen when the top one-tenth of the 1 percent control almost as much wealth as the bottom 90 percent of Americans and is using its wealth to buy the political process in Washington and state capitols. So he called for a constitutional amendment to turn back the U.S. Supreme Court decision in Citizens United.

Noting that he was speaking in a university community, Sanders called for free tuition at public colleges and universities.

"One of great crises facing this country is the fact that we live in a very competitive global economy. If we are going to compete effectively … we need the best-educated workforce in the world," he said.

Hundreds of thousands of young people can't afford to go to college, and those who graduate often have tens of thousands of dollars of debt, Sanders said.

More stories from James Q. Lynch

Former Iowa GOP chair downplays concerns with straw poll

Five tied for national lead in GOP nomination race

"What kind of stupidity is it?" he asked.

That touched Connor McPartland, a recent University of Iowa graduate from Missouri., who sported a "Bernie" sticker.

"I have lots of loans, and his plan to let me refinance that hits close to home," he said.

Sanders, who called for an investment in infrastructure to create as many as 13 million good-paying jobs, will need to knit together the Cavanaughs and McPartlands along with those whose priorities include expanding Social Security benefits, raising the minimum wage and opposing the Trans-Pacific Partnership and increased spending on the military.

"I can't do this alone," he said. "I can't win the election by myself," Sanders said. "I can't govern by myself. The political revolution means that each and every person here and in America in his or her own way has got to take a stand.

"You are not wasting your time," he concluded. "What you're doing is the most patriotic. You are standing up for America and standing up for democracy. That's what we've all got to do."

Lincoln Chafee to announce presidential run on June 3 // Politico // Ben Schreckinger and Jonathan Topaz - May 30, 2015

With no mega-donor waiting in the wings, the super PAC will also be banking on small contributions from younger donors. "When you spend your entire career fighting … for the most disadvantaged, it is unlikely that a candidate or a super PAC is going to have any cozy relationship with billionaires or Wall Street executives."

The event itself had the feel of a preppy 4th of July barbecue, with supporters in Ray-Bans waving American flags passed out by organizers – an appropriate prop for any political rally but especially so for O'Malley, who often cloaks himself in Baltimore's ties to the War of 1812 and the composition of the Star-Spangled Banner after the bombing of Fort McHenry in Baltimore Harbor. Indeed, he delivered his announcement directly beneath a massive American flag perched above the city's Inner Harbor.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

With sweat glistening on his brow, O'Malley pledged to "rebuild the American dream now in our time" and laid out a progressive agenda of restoring the middle class, creating a massive jobs program for renewable energy, and tightening financial industry regulation.

He drew his biggest applause for a triple shot at the biggest names in both parties and on Wall Street.

"Recently, the CEO of Goldman Sachs let his employees know that he'd be just fine with either Bush or Clinton. I bet he would," said O'Malley. "Well, I've got news for the bullies of Wall Street — the presidency is not a crown to be passed back and forth by you between two royal families."

O'Malley also directly addressed the unrest in Baltimore, saying it pointed to larger issues than policing and was the result of the systematic economic problems he intended to address as president.

In January, O'Malley left the governor's office on a down note. Despite unseating incumbent Republican Bob Ehrlich in 2006 and cruising to an easy reelection four years later in a rematch, his lieutenant governor and anointed successor Anthony Brown lost election to an unknown Republican, a stunning upset chalked up to a combination of inept campaigning and O'Malley fatigue after he introduced a series of tax hikes.

Whatever roadblocks O'Malley faces, his camp makes the case that Democratic voters will recognize him as a true progressive who is also electable as a nominee. As Clinton wages a stage-managed campaign and avoids contact with the press, O'Malley's camp is betting that his knack for hands-on retail politicking will give him an advantage in early states like Iowa and New Hampshire where voters have to come to expect exactly that. "The early-state process really suits the governor," said one O'Malley insider.

Any path to the nomination would likely have to run through Iowa, a state that historically has been less kind to the Clintons than New Hampshire. O'Malley invested heavily there in the last election cycle, sending 14 staffers from his O'Say Can You See PAC to aid Iowa Democrats in what turned out to be a disastrous midterm election for the state party. O'Malley attended more than 20 events in Iowa last year and has visited the state several times this year.

Following the announcement, O'Malley has events scheduled in Iowa on Saturday and in New Hampshire on Sunday.

Even Clinton's camp has conceded the nominating contest will become more heated than many people expect — and O'Malley has nowhere to go but up as the primary electorate tunes into the race and gets acquainted with a youthful-looking politician who fronts his own Irish rock band and used Snapchat to announce the location of his announcement.

"No matter what we think right now, there's going to be intense focus on this as we get close to the Iowa caucuses," said Bill Carrick, who managed Richard Gephardt's 1988 presidential campaign. "It almost inevitably is forced to become a competition."

Dem ocrats Seek a Richer Roster to Match G.O.P. // NYT // Eric Lichtblau and Nicholas Confessore - May 30, 2015

Over the last few months, Harold M. Ickes, a longtime ally ofHillary Rodham Clinton, has helped organize private meetings around the country with union leaders, Clinton backers and Democratic strategists. The pressing topic: Who will step up to be the Democrats' megadonors in the 2016 presidential race?

Republican contenders have already secured hundreds of millions of dollars in commitments from a stable of billionaires, including a Wall Street hedge fund executive, a Las Vegas casino magnate, a Florida auto dealer, a Wyoming investor and, of course, the Kansas-born billionaires David H. and Charles G. Koch. But none of the biggest Democratic donors from past elections — for example, the Chicago investor Fred Eychaner, the climate-change activist Tom Steyer and the entertainment mogul Jeffrey Katzenberg — have committed to supporting Mrs. Clinton on nearly the same scale.

"No one has stepped forward as the savior," said Matt Bennett, a longtime Democratic consultant in Washington.

The leading super PAC backing Mrs. Clinton, Priorities USA Action, has won commitments of only about $15 million so far, Democrats involved with the group's fund-raising said. And while the absence of a competitive race for the Democratic nomination gives Mrs. Clinton more time to catch up with

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Republican rivals, her allies are planning to push the party's wealthiest donors for more money than most of them have ever given.

Interactive Feature | What Hillary Clinton Would Need to Do to Win Mrs. Clinton can expect little if any opposition in the Democratic primaries. But she was similarly well positioned when she declared her candidacy in 2007.

In planning sessions and one-on-one meetings with donors, Mr. Ickes, who is a Priorities USA board member, and other Clinton supporters are discussing how to raise as much as $300 million for Democratic outside groups. That is almost twice as much as Democratic super PACs and other outside groups spent to help re-elect President Obama in 2012, when conservative super PACs far outspent liberal ones.

This ambitious goal will require the emergence of a new class of at least 20 Democratic donors who can give $5 million or even $10 million each. Mr. Ickes said recruiting them would not be easy.

"Our side isn't used to being asked for that kind of money," Mr. Ickes said. "If you asked them to put up $100 million for a hospital wing, they'd be the first in line."

The hurdles begin with the candidate. While Mrs. Clinton has committed to meeting personally with potential super PAC donors, people close to her say she has not yet grappled with the kind of big-donor courting that has framed the early months of the Republican race.

Interactive Feature | Who Is Running for President (and Who's Not)? At least a dozen Republicans and a handful of Democrats have expressed an interest in running for their party's 2016 presidential nomination.

She is also navigating the intricate rules on what a candidate may do to help super PACs, which, since the Supreme Court's Citizens United decision in 2010, can raise unlimited funds from individuals and corporations but may not "coordinate" with candidates. Fearful of violating the rules, Mrs. Clinton plans to limit her direct appeals to donors.

Those appeals also threaten to undercut her message on the corrupting influence of unchecked money in politics: She has called for repealing Citizens United and hassaid that changing the country's campaign finance system to "get unaccountable money out of it once and for all" would be among her top priorities as president.

Mrs. Clinton also faces a perception that neither she nor her husband, former President Bill Clinton, is exactly lacking cash. Together, they earned at least $30 million in the last 16 months. And Mr. Clinton's aggressive courting of donors, in the White House and now as head of the Clinton Foundation, has been an enduring source of controversy.

Inflated estimates of Mrs. Clinton's campaign budget — a figure of $2.5 billion was widely circulated — have also been a headache for her campaign and for Priorities USA. A more realistic fund-raising target for her campaign, they say, is around $1 billion.

One challenge for Mr. Ickes and other fund-raisers is convincing potential donors, large and small, of the importance of super PACs to Mrs. Clinton's chances. In part to convey that message, Priorities USA recently brought in Guy Cecil, a well-known Democratic operative with close ties to Mrs. Clinton's campaign, to lead the organization.

In an interview, Mr. Cecil acknowledged the need for a cultural shift among Democratic givers. "People are starting to understand that Priorities' work is critical and not just a luxury," he said. "If we are going to be successful in 2016, it will require more from everyone, at every level."

Mrs. Clinton will have little difficulty mustering a large network of so-called bundlers, the donors at the heart of a presidential campaign's fund-raising operation, who solicit contributions limited to a few thousand dollars from their friends and business associates. But the pool of Democratic super PAC donors is smaller and more specialized: The checks they write are far larger, and the money would go not to Mrs. Clinton's campaign but to outside groups like Priorities USA.

Some of those donors have poured substantial sums into Democratic super PACs in past election cycles: Mr. Steyer, a retired California hedge fund founder, invested $74 million in 2014 to pressure candidates to back policies to combat climate change, becoming the Democratic Party's leading donor. Mr. Eychaner, a press-shy Chicago media investor active in gay rights issues, gave at least $22 million to Democratic super PACs in 2012 and 2014.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Other potential super PAC donors, like the Walmart heiress Alice Walton, the Los Angeles investor Ron Burkle and the media investor Haim Saban, are believed to be prospects this year because of their longstanding ties to the Clinton family. Another possibility, and one of the wealthiest, is former Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg of New York, though most of the millions of dollars he has donated in recent years have gone to his own super PAC, which has backed Republicans as well as Democrats.

Other potential donors of $10 million or more, fearful of being targeted for attacks by Republicans, want to write the biggest checks only when their peers do, forcing Democratic fund-raisers to devise what are in effect donor buddy systems, matching up would-be givers who can synchronize their check-writing.

For those still nervous, Priorities USA is also considering resurrecting an affiliated nonprofit group that could accept secret donations. Such fund-raising has been roundly denounced by watchdog groups — and, recently, by Mrs. Clinton herself.

A bigger problem, Democratic fund-raisers and super PAC officials acknowledge, is that they are out of practice. The peak for donations to Democratic outside groups was 2004, when the hedge fund billionaire George Soros and the insurance executive Peter B. Lewis poured close to $40 million into groups opposing President George W. Bush. The groups collected almost $200 million, largely on the strength of liberal donors' dislike of Mr. Bush.

"There will definitely be some sticker shock," said Michael Vachon, a political adviser to Mr. Soros. "The money game has changed even since the last election."

"Ted Cruz's super PAC raised $30 million in a few weeks," Mr. Vachon added, "and he has no more chance of being president than I have."

He said Mr. Soros had not yet decided how much he would give during the 2016 cycle.

Mel Heifetz, a Philadelphia real estate investor who gave $1 million in 2012 to Priorities USA, plans to contribute roughly the same amount for this campaign. But he worries about how much his fellow donors will give. "Even the wealthy Democrats I know have limitations as to what they'll contribute," he said.

In each of the last two election cycles, 14 of the top 20 donors gave their money to conservative organizations and Republican campaigns, according to data from the Center for Responsive Politics. That does not include most donations to the conservative network overseen by the Kochs, composed largely of nonprofit groups that do not reveal their donors. The network is planning to raise $889 million for its political and philanthropic efforts through 2016.

Sheldon Adelson, the Las Vegas casino developer who spent $93 million in 2012 to support Republican candidates, is likely to invest a similar sum this time. Robert Mercer, a hedge fund executive, has helped bankroll super PACs supporting Mr. Cruz, a United States senator from Texas. Norman Braman, a billionaire Miami auto dealer, plans to spend $10 million or more to support the campaign of Senator Marco Rubio of Florida. And Foster Friess, a mutual-fund investor in Wyoming who spent more than $2 million in 2012 on Rick Santorum's bid for the White House, is supporting him again this time.

Democrats concede that they may simply be outgunned in the battle for wealthy donors.

"It's really David versus Goliath," said Chris Lehane, a Democratic strategist and adviser to Mr. Steyer. They hosted a fund-raiser for Mrs. Clinton at Mr. Steyer's San Francisco home this month, with donations capped at $2,700.

Mr. Steyer has not said how much he plans to spend in the 2016 elections, but Mr. Lehane said his contributions would be "a drop in the bucket compared to what the Koch brothers and Big Oil are spending to push their agenda."

GOP

Sen. Rand Paul: Tomorrow I Will Stop the Illegal NSA Spying // TIME // Sen. Rand Paul - May 30,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

3015

"We have all the tools we need to preserve both security and liberty"

Sunday, I will continue my fight to end the illegal collection of American phone records. The Second Appeals court has ruled the NSA's bulk collection of phone records illegal. We should not be debating modifying an illegal program. We should simply end this illegal program.

I have fought for several years now to end the invasive and illegal spying of the NSA on ordinary Americans. I am ready to debate how we fight terrorism without giving up our liberty.

Let me be clear: I acknowledge the need for a robust intelligence agency and for a vigilant national security. I believe we must fight terrorism, and I believe we must stand strong against our enemies.

Yet the expiration of the NSA's sweeping, all-encompassing and ineffectual powers will not relinquish functions necessary for protecting national security but will instead do what we should have done all along—rely on the Constitution for these powers.

Of particular concern is allowing law enforcement to continue surveillance on suspected terrorists. This tool will still be available but through constitutionally sound warrants permitted by the Fourth Amendment. The only change is that the FBI must obtain a specific warrant for each device used by the suspect under surveillance through individualized warrants granted by the courts.

Bulk collection of phone records didn't find or stop the Tsarnaev brothers from the massacre in Boston. In fact, one might argue that all of the money spent on bulk collection takes money away from human analysts that might have noticed the older brother's trip to become radicalized in Chechnya. Just this week the FBI opined that they don't have enough resources to monitor jihadists suspects in the U.S.

I would take the billions spent on collecting records of suspicionless Americans and spend it instead on FBI agents to monitor suspects who have given probable cause that they are a danger to us. In the recent jihadist attack in Texas, one of the terrorists was well known to authorities. He had already been convicted of a terrorism charge. I would spend more money and more time developing probable cause warrants to delve deeply and effectively into individuals like this.

Individual warrants every day are used to arrest dangerous people. I see no reason we can't defend ourselves using the same Constitutional processes we've used for over two centuries.

Our country was founded on the principle of individual—not general—warrants.

After the current illegal powers end Sunday night the government could still get a warrant. It will just have to say on it Mr. John Smith, not Mr. Verizon.

One suspect, one warrant. Not hundreds of millions of records swept up in one illegal order.

I would argue this will make us more safe, not less. It has been said that finding a terrorist is like finding a needle in a haystack. Well, for years, your government's answer has been to make the haystack bigger by gobbling up every American's information.

That must end.

The Second Circuit recently ruled that Section 215 of the Patriot Act does not authorize bulk collection of phone records, and an alternative collection mechanism is unnecessary. In fact, the recent Department of Justice Inspector General report showed that the government is using broad terms in these letters to receive mass electronic transactional records.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Inspector General report also concluded Section 215 was not responsible for preventing any terrorist plots because agents queried "did not identify any major case developments that resulted from use of the records obtained in response to Section 215 orders."

Opponents of civil liberties cite the expiration of the "lone wolf" provision as dangerous, but this provision allowing law enforcement to track suspects who are unaffiliated with a formal terror network has never been used in a single investigation during the 14 years of the Patriot Act's existence. Again, even when this provision expires, law enforcement will still be able to track foreign individuals who are suspected of engaging in terrorism through courts empowered to grant warrants if there is probable cause or reasonable suspicion.

The vast expansion of the spy state and the corresponding erosion of our Constitutional rights has not made America safer. Even the most vocal defenders of the program have failed to identify a single thwarted plot as a result of the government's sweeping, undefined, and illegal war on civil liberties.

The Obama presidency will be recalled as the era when most Democrats, with the notable exception of the principled Senator Ron Wyden, abandoned civil liberties for the tyranny of power—a far cry from then-Senator Obama's stirring defense of liberty in 2007. "Our Constitution works," Obama said. "We will again set an example for the world that the law is not subject to the whims of stubborn rulers, and that justice is not arbitrary."

It was a danger that Democratic Senator Frank Church presciently foresaw, warning that a dictator through the N.S.A. "could enable it to impose total tyranny, and there would be no way to fight back."

Our government is not comprised of angels, and we must have rules in place that acknowledge that, and protect our rights while protecting our national security.

Now, it's time for Republicans to lead when it comes to protecting the liberty of all Americans from the whims of stubborn rulers.

This president could fix the problem by himself but he hasn't done so. I stand ready to help lead the way on this important matter. On Sunday I will stop the illegal NSA spying.

Sen. Rand Paul Vows to Prevent Senate From Extending Patriot Act // WSJ // Kristina Peterson and Carole E. Lee - May 30, 2015

WASHINGTON—Republican presidential candidate Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky vowed Saturday to prevent the Senate from extending the Patriot Act, all but ensuring that some U.S. government surveillance activities will lapse Sunday at midnight.

The Senate will meet for what's expected to be a tumultuous debate on the legislation at 4 p.m. Sunday, one minute after the White House will begin the process of shutting down the National Security Agency's bulk collection of phone records. The bulk-data collection program is just one of a host of surveillance programs set to expire at midnight, although administration officials said authorization would begin to lapse at 8 p.m. if Congress doesn't act.

Senate Republicans are split over whether to overhaul the NSA program. But Mr. Paul's resistance will trump any compromises in a chamber that can only move swiftly when all lawmakers consent. Even if senators were to strike a deal Sunday easing sticking points over the 2001 national security law known as the Patriot Act, Mr. Paul's objections would prevent the chamber from skipping time-consuming procedural steps ahead of the midnight deadline.

"Tomorrow, I will force the expiration of the NSA illegal spy program," Mr. Paul said in a statement Saturday. "I believe we must fight terrorism, and I believe we must stand strong against our enemies. But we do not need to give up who we are to defeat them. In fact, we must not."

The House has already passed a bipartisan bill, known as the U.S.A. Freedom Act, which would end the NSA's collection of bulk phone information, requiring the government instead to obtain court approval to request phone records from telephone companies on a case-by-case basis. The White House supports that measure, too. But in the Senate last week it fell three votes short of the 60 needed to clear a procedural hurdle on the bill.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Although aides said support for the House measure is growing in the Senate, it could only pass before the midnight deadline if all 100 senators agreed to speed up debate on the measure. Mr. Paul made clear he wouldn't permit that. He is also expected to block any short-term extensions of the current law. Mr. Paul has made his opposition to the government surveillance laws a centerpiece of his presidential campaign, criticizing the program for more than 10 hours on the Senate floor earlier this month.

President Barack Obama warned Friday that any lapse in the surveillance programs puts the U.S. at risk of missing a terrorism threat and called on the Senate to act by Sunday's deadline.

"We've only got a few days," Mr. Obama said in the Oval Office after meeting with Attorney General Loretta Lynch. "I don't want us to be in a situation in which for a certain period of time those authorities go away, where suddenly we're dark, and heaven forbid we have a problem where we could have prevented a terrorist attack or apprehended someone who engaged in dangerous activity, but we didn't do so simply because of inaction in the Senate."

Mr. Paul's plans were set to thwart a strategy put in place by his fellow Kentucky GOP senator, Majority Leader Mitch McConnell, who has used looming deadlines to try to force the chamber to move quickly. Mr. McConnell has challenged the House measure, saying its constraints could harm national security. But his efforts to convince lawmakers that a short-term extension of current law was the only way to prevent a lapse backfired, when Mr. Paul and some Democrats appeared ready to let the law expire.

"Senator Paul is only in a position to force the Patriot Act to expire because of Senator McConnell's reckless, irresponsible tactics and inability to communicate with his fellow Republicans," said Adam Jentleson, spokesman for Senate Minority Leader Harry Reid (D., Nev.)

The Senate may vote again Sunday on the House bill, which the White House and senior House Republicans have been urging them to pass to avoid any lapses in the law.

"Because opponents of reform have run out the clock and jammed the Senate, we are not left with much time," Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont, the top Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, said in remarks prepared for the Senate floor on Sunday. "If we pass the U.S.A. Freedom Act, the president can sign it tonight. And the intelligence community can move forward with the certainty it needs to protect the American people."

Among their biggest opponents has been Mr. McConnell, who has raised concerns that the House bill wouldn't require phone companies to retain the phone records information that could help authorities spot terrorist activity. Senate Intelligence Committee Chairman Richard Burr (R., N.C.) also has suggested extending the House bill's six-month transition for telephone companies to take over the data collection to two years.

Even if the Senate were to strike a deal on those two issues, it isn't clear that the House would accept the changes to the bill it passed easily in a 338-88 vote. The House Judiciary Committee voted down an amendment from Rep. Steve King (R., Iowa) that would have added a data retention mandate.

"There's a real risk if they start to tamper with the U.S.A. Freedom Act that they produce something that may get through the Senate, but won't get through the House," said Rep. Adam Schiff of California, the top Democrat on the House Intelligence Committee. For instance, lengthening the bill's transition period could cost it support in the House, he said. "That kind of delay I don't think people are going to support."

The Senate's actions may also be constrained again by 2016 presidential candidate Sen. Rand Paul (R., Ky.) Last week, objections primarily from Mr. Paul and some liberal Democrats, blocked the Senate from passing a short-term extension of the Patriot Act provisions that needed the support of all 100 senators to skip time-consuming procedural steps.

Mr. Paul has made his opposition to the government surveillance laws a centerpiece of his presidential campaign and is expected to block short-term extensions on Sunday.

"On Sunday, I'm going to fight to end the NSA's illegal spying program with everything I've got," Mr. Paul tweeted this week.

"If he wants to wreck this thing for whatever reasons, he potentially could," said Sen. Dan Coats (R., Ind.).

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Groups as disparate as the liberal American Civil Liberties Union and conservative Tea Party Patriots agree that the bulk-collection program should expire. The two groups said Friday the fact that they find common ground should lead Congress to take seriously arguments against the government's surveillance tactics.

Anthony Romero, executive director of the ACLU, and Jenny Beth Martin, co-founder and president of the Tea Party Patriots, hailed the robust public debate surrounding surveillance on a call with reporters. Mr. Romero urged the Senate not to short-circuit the conversation by approving the House measure.

Ms. Martin targeted phone records in particular, saying the Tea Party Patriots would be satisfied with the expiration of that provision alone or with its modification under the U.S.A. Freedom Act. However, the ACLU is seeking broader changes to the national security law passed in the wake of the 2001 terrorist attacks.

"Neither the Tea Party or the ACLU has any issue with the need of the government to prosecute individuals who do harm to our nation," Mr. Romero said. "The question is how."

White House press secretary Josh Earnest said Friday that the only way to avoid that is for Congress to reach an agreement on Sunday.

"There is no plan B," Mr. Earnest said. "There is no executive action that the president can take to give our law enforcement and national security professionals the tools they need, all of the tools that they need, including the tools that are included in the U.S.A. Freedom Act."

However, he said, "if faced with a scenario in which they have some of these tools taken out of their toolbox, they will try to use all of the tools that they currently have to do what's necessary to keep us safe."

Lawmakers said efforts to reauthorize the surveillance program—if it is allowed to lapse—would be complicated by a recent court challenge.

"It becomes more difficult to pass a bill later if the authorities are allowed to completely expire," Mr. Schiff said.

Walker maintains popularity with 7-point lead // Des Moines Register // Jennifer Jacob - May 30, 2015

Scott Walker's popularity streak in Iowa is real: He's seven percentage points ahead of his nearest competition in the presidential horse race here, chased by a tight pack of four in a clear top tier: Ben Carson, Rand Paul, Jeb Bush and Mike Huckabee.

Marco Rubio lags in a single-digit scrum, but a deeper look into the numbers shows that if Walker is the hare in Iowa, Rubio may be the tortoise, potentially positioned to pull ahead if he campaigns hard, a new Des Moines Register/Bloomberg Politics Iowa Poll finds.

Walker, a Wisconsin governor known for imposing restrictions on labor unions, hasn't officially announced he's running for the White House in 2016, but he's the first choice for 17 percent of likely GOP caucusgoers in Iowa, making him the one to beat in an oversized field of 16 Republicans tested.

"He's fearless," said poll respondent Suzanne Sawyer, a 53-year-old Fort Dodge small-business owner who considers herself very conservative. "He will do what's right for the people that he was elected by. He has proven that in Wisconsin — he went to bat on collective bargaining to get things back in line financially. He's out to do what's best for the state, not what's best for him politically."

Two-thirds of likely Republican caucusgoers view Walker favorably, the highest in the poll, including nearly a third of respondents who view him very favorably.

Walker is now more solidly the front-runner than in a January Iowa Poll, when he had 15 percent and was a lone percentage point ahead of Rand Paul, a Kentucky U.S. senator who agitates against government snooping and warmongering. Paul remains in second place, tied at 10 percent with Ben Carson, a retired brain surgeon who leads with women who plan to attend the GOP caucuses.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Paul bests the field in attracting moderate Republicans, independents who intend to attend the Republican caucuses (21 percent, all but double any other contender), and likely GOP caucusgoers who are under 45. Paul, who has said the GOP "can have people on both sides" of the same-sex marriage issue, has inherited many of the liberty movement conservatives who supported his father, then-Texas U.S. Rep. Ron Paul, in his Iowa caucus races in 2008 and 2012.

But Rand Paul has seen his favorability rating in the poll drop by 9 percentage points since January, more than for any other GOP contender.

"Paul is slightly worse off, which tells me that his efforts to woo his father's supporters have hurt him with typical GOP voters," said Katie Packer, a Washington, D.C.-based GOP strategist who worked for Mitt Romney's 2012 presidential campaign.

She said of Ben Carson: "People should not underestimate him. He is not going to be the nominee, but he will have influence on who is. Someone will have to go after him soon."

Next in the horse race are Bush, a former governor of Florida, and Mike Huckabee, a former Arkansas governor and winner of the 2008 Iowa caucuses. They're tied with 9 percent, the new poll shows.

In the last four months, Bush and Carson have each gained 1 percentage point. Paul lost four points, and Huckabee lost one.

Data show Rubio has easier path than Bush

The numbers drop off after the top five contenders, leaving a lagging pack with eight months to go before Iowa fires the starting gun on presidential voting.

Tied in sixth place with 6 percent are Rubio, a Florida U.S. senator who has set foot in Iowa only twice this year, and former Pennsylvania U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum, a religious conservative who won the 2012 caucuses.

Although Rubio doesn't show up in the upper tier, he tops the list of contenders whom likely caucusgoers say is their second choice. Beyond that, 49 percent say they're willing to consider him. Rubio, who would become the nation's first Latino president if he wins the White House, also ranks third highest in favorability — 60 percent view him positively, and just 17 percent unfavorably.

"It really does suggest he's poised to break," pollster J. Ann Selzer said.

The underlying numbers show Bush, a relative of two previous U.S. presidents, has a tougher path in Iowa than Rubio. Bush is viewed unfavorably by more likely caucusgoers (45 percent) than anyone else except for Donald Trump, a Manhattan businessman turned reality TV personality (63 percent) and New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie (58 percent), who is known for his occasionally bellicose East Coast behavior.

And asked if they could ever support Bush for president, a third said no, never.

"I was looking real hard at Jeb Bush," said poll respondent Judy Heath, a 63-year-old hair stylist and artist from Bettendorf, "and then he opened his mouth and started talking. Time magazine had a great article on him and I thought, 'Maybe,' but then, 'No, no, no, not this again.' "

But Bush, who has logged just two Iowa visits this year and has yet to formally launch his presidential campaign, is considered the first or second choice for president by 16 percent of likely GOP caucusgoers, which ranks him in fourth place in the combined tally. By that measure, Walker stays firmly in first, (27 percent), Rubio is next (18 percent) and Huckabee is third (17 percent).

Bush ranks first with no demographic group, but he comes in second after Walker with GOP likely caucusgoers in four categories: those who are age 65 and over, college graduates, Catholics and those who describe themselves as "conservative," as opposed to "very conservative."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Jeb Bush and (campaign-manager-to-be) David Kochel should be pleased," said Iowa politics expert Kedron Bardwell, a professor at Simpson College.

Nine contenders come in at 5 percent or less

Five percent of likely caucusgoers say Texas U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz is their current first choice for president. That ranks him in eighth place in the overall horse race. Cruz, the first in the field to announce his candidacy, casts himself as a religious conservative and uncompromising fighter for the Constitution.

"I'm surprised that Cruz has not capitalized more on his announcement," Packer said. "I'm beginning to think that opinions are pretty solid and aren't likely to shift — either you like him or you don't."

Christie and Trump are tied for ninth place. In 11th place is former Texas Gov. Rick Perry, with 3 percent, followed by former tech company CEO Carly Fiorina and Ohio Gov. John Kasich with 2 percent.

Rounding out the bottom are South Carolina U.S. Sen. Lindsey Graham and Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, who are tied for 14th place with 1 percent each, while former New York Gov. George Pataki is at less than 1 percent.

The Iowa Poll of 402 likely Republican caucusgoers was conducted May 25-29 by Selzer & Co. of Des Moines. The margin of error is plus or minus 4.9 percentage points.

— Register staff writer Jason Noble contributed to this report.

Few qualms about senators

Although it was a running GOP theme in the 2008 election that Barack Obama shouldn't be elected president because he was a first-term U.S. senator with no executive experience, the same resume isn't a problem for Republicans in the 2016 race.

There are three first-term senators (Ted Cruz of Texas, Rand Paul of Kentucky and Marco Rubio of Florida) in the GOP nomination race. More than 70 percent of Iowa's likely GOP caucusgoers say it makes no difference in their support of any of them, the new Des Moines Register/Bloomberg Politics Iowa Poll shows.

Fiorina gains in favorability // Des Moines Register // Jennifer Jacobs - May 30, 2015

Even though Carly Fiorina is doing very poorly in the presidential horse race, esteem for the former tech company CEO has surged among GOP likely caucusgoers in the last four months.

Just 15 percent viewed her favorably in the last Des Moines Register/Bloomberg Politics Iowa Poll, in January. That has jumped to 41 percent in the May 25-29 poll.

None of the other 15 contenders tested saw their favorability rating climb as much since January. Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker and retired doctor Ben Carson saw the next biggest increases, up 6 points each.

Another finding: Pieces of Fiorina's resume that her rivals use to criticize her don't matter much to Republican caucusgoers. Most say it's not important that she was fired by Hewlett-Packard (70 percent), that she has never held elected office (59 percent), or that she laid off 30,000 employees as CEO (52 percent).

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Seventy-one percent say it's not important that she's the only woman in the GOP field. But 72 percent say it's important that she has aggressively taken on Democratic presidential front-runner Hillary Clinton.

"It's interesting that Carly is getting a lot of credit for aggressively going after Hillary, but not much credit for being a woman," said GOP consultant Katie Packer. "This tells me that the other candidates need to not be afraid and tentative about going after Hillary. They can't be a woman, but they can take on Hillary."

Christie to pull New Jersey from Common Core // The Hill // Jonathan Easley - May 30, 2015

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie announced Thursday he will pull his state out of Common Core, a move that could bolster his standing with grassroots Republican primary voters opposed to the education standards.

In an afternoon speech at Burlington County College in New Jersey, Christie said the program, which was implemented under his predecessor, former New Jersey Gov. Jon Corzine (D-N.J.), has “brought only confusion and frustration.”

“It’s now been five years since Common Core was adopted and the truth is that it’s simply not working,” he said, according to remarks provided by his office. “It has brought only confusion and frustration to our parents and has brought distance between our teachers and the communities where they work. Instead of solving problems in our classrooms, it is creating new ones. And when we aren’t getting the job done for our children, we need to do something different.”

Christie’s decision will be viewed in light of his political ambitions. He’s considering running for president but trails badly in the polls as he seeks to recover from the scandal surrounding lane closures on the George Washington Bridge.

Common Core has become toxic on the right, with virtually every Republican presidential candidate except for Jeb Bush vowing to kill the standards if elected president.

Christie set up a panel last year to investigate the program’s implementation. In recent months, he’s become increasingly vocal about his misgivings, saying he had “real concerns” about “how it’s being rolled out” during a November appearance on a New Jersey radio show.

On Thursday he argued that federal meddling has spoiled the education standards, which have become a symbol of government overreach among many on the right.

“I have heard far too many people – teachers and parents from across the state – that the Common Core standards were not developed by New Jersey educators and parents,” he said. “As a result, the buy in from both communities has not been what we need for maximum achievements.

“I agree. It is time to have standards that are even higher and come directly from our communities,” Christie said. “And, in my view, this new era can be even greater by adopting new standards right here in New Jersey – not 200 miles away on the banks of the Potomac River.”

Christie said he will task David Hespe, the commissioner of New Jersey’s Department of Education, with assembling a panel of teachers, educators and parents to develop new standards.

Many believe Bush's past embrace of the standards could doom his candidacy. He did not implement them as governor, but embraced them since leaving office through his education foundation.

Bush has fought back by seeking to highlight Florida's education turnaround under his watch. Bush has argued that he supports high standards in general, whether those come through Common Core or not, and that he opposes the federal overreach that many argue have corrupted Common Core.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

DOMESTIC

Joe Biden's son, Beau, dies of brain cancer // Reuters // May 30, 2015

Beau Biden, son of U.S. Vice President Joe Biden, has died after battling brain cancer, the vice president said on Saturday.

"The entire Biden family is saddened beyond words. We know that Beau's spirit will live on in all of us, especially through his brave wife, Hallie, and two remarkable children, Natalie and Hunter," said a statement released by the White House.

Biden was 46 and a former Delaware attorney general. He had been hospitalized this month for treatment at the Walter Reed Army Medical Center outside Washington.

After eight years as attorney general, Beau Biden joined the investor law firm Grant & Eisenhofer in 2015.

He served a yearlong tour in Iraq as a captain in the Delaware Army National Guard and underwent surgery at a cancer center in Texas last year. He suffered a mild stroke in 2010.

President Barack Obama paid warm tribute to Beau Biden, saying he took after his father.

"He studied the law, like his dad, even choosing the same law school. He chased a life of public service, like his dad, serving in Iraq and as Delaware's Attorney General," Obama said in a statement.

"Like his dad, Beau was a good, big-hearted, devoutly Catholic and deeply faithful man, who made a difference in the lives of all he touched, and he lives on in their hearts."

The vice president has faced family tragedy before. Shortly after winning election to the U.S. Senate in 1972, his wife Neilia and three children were in a car crash. Neilia and their daughter were killed, while their two sons, Beau and Hunter, were injured.

Joe Biden has been Obama's vice president since the president first took office in January 2009. He has a deep knowledge of Washington politics after decades in the U.S. Senate, and a folksy, avuncular style that contrasts with Obama's more aloof manner.

Patriot Act Deadline Forces Rare Sunday Senate Session // RCP // James Arkin - May 30, 2015

The Senate will gavel in a rare weekend session Sunday afternoon, just hours ahead of the midnight expiration of controversial Patriot Act provisions, but the path to a solution remains very much unclear.

At issue is Section 215 of the 2001 Patriot Act, which is used as legal justification for the National Security Agency's bulk telephone data collection, the program revealed two years ago by leaker Edward Snowden. For the most part, lawmakers currently fall into three camps: those who would like to see the law reauthorized and the program continue unchanged; those who support a reform measure that would end the bulk data collection; and those who would prefer to see the entire Patriot Act expire.

The Sunday session is a direct result of the Senate's failure to find a solution during a Friday night session last week that carried into the early hours of Saturday, with lawmakers equally eager to solve the problem and make it home for the Memorial Day recess. Two attempts to clear the 60-vote threshold failed: one involved reform legislation that passed overwhelmingly in the House, and the other was to extend the program for two months, thus allowing time for the debate to continue.

After those two votes failed, Majority Leader Mitch McConnell tried to extend the program for one week, then four days, then two days and finally a single day, but opponents objected each time, after which McConnell announced the session this Sunday.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“One more opportunity to act responsibly to not allow this program to expire,” McConnell said. “This is a high-threat period and we know what’s going on overseas, we know what’s been tried here at home. My colleagues, do we really want this law to expire? We’ve got a week to discuss it; we’ll have one day to do it. So we better be ready next Sunday afternoon to prevent the country from being endangered by the total expiration of the program.”

It remains unclear, however, what direction the session will take. McConnell entered motions to recommit for both the House-passed USA Freedom Act and the short-term, two-month extension, which means he can bring both of those up for a vote again. He has not indicated, however, whether either will get another vote Sunday.

Proponents of the USA Freedom Act – which passed the House before recess by a 338-88 margin – argue that it is the only way forward, particularly just hours before the deadline. The House isn’t scheduled to return until Monday afternoon, after the program expires, thus making any short-term fix extremely unlikely. Though the Senate failed to move the House bill by a 57-42 margin last week, there is some confidence that three or more votes could be picked up with the deadline imminent.

Utah Republican Sen. Mike Lee, one of the co-sponsors and most vocal supporters of the USA Freedom Act, said he thinks there is a “good chance” it would pass if brought back up for a vote Sunday. Lee said he’s been “working the phones aggressively” during the recess with colleagues who are on the fence.

“There were several people who voted against it Friday night who I know felt that they’d rather have something pass rather than nothing,” he told RealClearPolitics in an interview. “I really think they would have voted for it and I’m even more confident that we’ll have several who voted against it who would vote for it now.”

Part of the problem for McConnell, who preferred a clean reauthorization of the Patriot Act provisions without any changes, as well as supporters of the USA Freedom Act, is Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul, a 2016 presidential candidate and extremely vocal critic of the NSA’s domestic surveillance practices. Paul staged a filibuster last week, delaying consideration of the Patriot Act provisions, and later blocked multiple attempts by McConnell to renew the program for even as little as one day. He does not support the House bill and voted against it last Friday.

Paul has been forcefully fundraising off his recent Senate action, sending out a slew of emails to supporters during the recess talking about his stance against the NSA and asking for donations. In a lengthy email Friday morning, the libertarian-leaning senator said his 10-½ hour filibuster “has thrown Washington, D.C. into turmoil.”

“When the Senate comes back into session on May 31st, there will be just eight hours for spy state apologists to reach a deal to keep these programs going,” Paul wrote in the email. “Eight hours! I'm determined to do whatever I can to stop them – regardless of the ugly smears I face by both the press and surveillance state backers.”

A super PAC supporting Paul also released a Wrestlemania-style video Friday in anticipation of the special session. It featured Paul’s face Photoshopped onto a buff wrestler’s body and alluded to a showdown between him and President Obama – with the Kentucky senator labeled “The Rand Man” and an announcer calling him a “defender of freedom.” The ad highlighted how important the NSA fight is for Paul’s White House aspirations.

McConnell, who supports his fellow home state senator’s presidential run, has said that he and Paul simply have a difference of opinion on the issue, and that it’s not personal, according to the Associated Press. The majority leader also said that the wide margin of support in the House for the USA Freedom Act “makes it pretty challenging to extend the law as it is."

Lee said the choice is simply to pass the House-passed bill or let the surveillance authorities expire, and that he believes there is no alternative path forward because of the serious time constraints.

The pressure on McConnell to halt his opposition to the House bill has come from all sides. Obama supports the House measure and the White House has increasingly called this week for the Senate to pass it. Democrats have also applied pressure after nearly unanimously supporting the legislation last week – with independent Sen. Angus King, who caucuses with the Democrats, the only one voting against cloture. Democratic leadership – Minority Leader Harry Reid and Sens. Dick Durbin, Chuck Schumer and Patty Murray – released a joint statement Thursday pushing McConnell to pass the House bill.

“It's been five days since we adjourned while punting this issue until the 11th hour,” the senators said. “In that time, we have not moved any closer towards a solution but we have moved closer to the expiration of these authorities that you insist must not occur. It is time to abandon your opposition to the USA Freedom Act, and pass this bill.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Lee said he could have potentially supported a short-term extension last week with the goal being to debate amendments to the USA Freedom Act on the Senate floor, but the window for that option has passed.

"I've been telling my colleagues, Republicans and Democrats, if you want the provisions at issue to expire Sunday night, do nothing," Lee said. "If you want them not to expire, I think we've got exactly one option to do that, which is passing exactly what the House passed by an overwhelming margin."

Sunday sessions in the Senate are extremely rare, with the last one coming Dec. 15, 2013 and lasting just 20 minutes, with no votes. The last time the Senate voted on a Sunday was during the fiscal cliff showdown in late December 2012. There have been only eight Sunday sessions for the Senate during Obama's presidency.

Former House Speaker Dennis Hastert accused of hiding sex abuse of former student // Richard A. Serrano and Katherine Skiba - LAT // May 30, 2015

Dennis Hastert stumbled into political power amid a Republican sex scandal in 1998 that unexpectedly elevated the husky Illinoisan to a position just two heartbeats away from the presidency.

He became the longest-serving Republican House speaker in U.S. history, but remained so proud of his days as a small-town high school teacher and wrestling coach that he relished the Capitol Hill nickname "Coach."

But this week those once-idolized small-town roots caught up with the 73-year-old Hastert, who in recent years has worked behind the scenes as a Washington power broker.

On Friday, federal law enforcement officials said Hastert had paid $1.7 million over the last four years to conceal sexual abuse against a former male student he knew during his days as a teacher in Yorkville, Ill., where Hastert worked until 1981.

A top federal law enforcement official, who would not be identified speaking about the ongoing federal case, said investigators also spoke with a second man who raised similar allegations that corroborated what the former student said. The second person was not being paid by Hastert, the official said.

The disclosures followed Thursday's federal indictment against Hastert on charges of lying to the FBI about the reasons for large cash withdrawals he is accused of making to buy the man's silence.

"It goes back a long way, back to then," a second official said. "It has nothing to do with public corruption or a corruption scandal. Or to his time in office."

Hastert allegedly began by withdrawing $50,000 at a time, but when the activity was questioned by banking officials, he reduced the withdrawals to under $10,000, the indictment said.

That caught the attention of financial regulators, who suspected Hastert was trying to evade federal reporting requirements.

Concerned that Hastert might be the victim of criminal extortion arising from his government work or involved in some illegal activity, FBI agents asked the former speaker about the withdrawals. Hastert told the agents that he distrusted banks and still had the cash in his possession, according to the indictment.

Former colleagues expressed surprise at the charges. "Anyone who knows Denny is shocked and confused by the recent news," Sen. Mark Steven Kirk (R-Ill.) said Friday. "The former speaker should be afforded, like any other American, his day in court to address these very serious accusations."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

It was another sex scandal that led to Hastert's improbable rise to become House speaker.

He was plucked from a junior GOP leadership position in December 1998 after Republicans ousted former Speaker Newt Gingrich following a poor midterm election showing and then Gingrich's presumed successor, Rep. Bob Livingston of Louisiana, admitted to an extramarital affair and turned down the post.

In chaos and division, the party turned to a pragmatic, no-drama Midwesterner who was believed to have nothing to hide: J. Dennis Hastert.

Dubbed the “Accidental Speaker,” he dealt with the passage of President George W. Bush's tax cuts and the expansion of Medicare to include prescription drugs. In the aftermath of Sept. 11, he oversaw efforts to get money to New York and negotiate the Patriot Act.

Hastert left Congress in 2007, after Democrats had assumed the majority in the 2006 midterm election. Six months later, Dickstein Shapiro announced he was joining its team as a senior advisor, though he had to wait to become a lobbyist because of a federally mandated cooling-off period.

On Thursday, there were signs that Hastert's world had been turned upside down.

A spokesman for the CME Group confirmed that Hastert had resigned from the board of directors of the Chicago-based futures market operator.

Hastert also resigned his position as co-leader of Dickstein Shapiro's Public Policy and Political Law practice, a spokesman for the firm confirmed late Thursday.

Illinois legislators put on hold a proposal to spend $500,000 to put a statue in the state Capitol honoring Hastert. He had declined the offer about a month ago, a spokesman for state House Speaker Michael Madigan said.

On Friday, Hastert resigned from the board of the J. Dennis Hastert Center for Economics, Government and Public Policy at his alma mater, Wheaton College, a small, evangelical Christian college in the Chicago suburbs.

“The college respects Mr. Hastert's distinguished public service record and the due process being afforded him pursuant to the charges that have been filed against him,” Wheaton officials said in a statement announcing his resignation.

Thursday's indictment described misconduct against a person identified only as “Individual A,” noting that Hastert had known the person “most of Individual A's life.”

When asked about the nature of the alleged misconduct, the second official said, “It was sex.”

Hastert has not responded to requests for comment. A representative of the lobbying and law firm where he had worked, Dickstein Shapiro, declined to comment.

The indictment alleged Hastert had agreed to pay a total of $3.5 million to “compensate for and conceal his prior misconduct.”

He made several cash payments beginning in 2010, after being contacted by the individual, the indictment said.

U.S. judge grills lawyer defending Obama's healthcare law changes // Reuters // Lindsay

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Dunsmuir - May 28, 2015

A U.S. judge on Thursday blasted the Obama administration's motion to dismiss a lawsuit brought by Republicans in the U.S. House of Representatives over the implementation of the Democratic president's signature healthcare law.

Republicans in the House filed a lawsuit in November, saying administration officials unlawfully bypassed Congress.

At issue are executive changes authorizing Treasury payments to healthcare insurers without the funding being agreed by Congress and delaying implementation of the law's employer mandate, which required employers with more than 50 employees to provide healthcare coverage.

U.S. District Judge Rosemary Collyer, appointed by Obama's predecessor, Republican George W. Bush, repeatedly interrupted U.S. Justice Department lawyer Joel McElvain during the hearing in the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia.

Justice Department lawyers argue that the House lacks standing to sue, citing a section of U.S. law that means the House would have to prove it has been directly harmed.

"So it is your position that if the House of Representatives affirmatively voted not to fund something ... then that vote can be ignored by the administration, because after all, no one can sue them?" she asked.

McElvain argued that the merits of the case were not being discussed at the hearing, and that any perceived injury was "abstract."

"I'm not asking you to give me your brief. I want you to explain ... why it's not an insult to the Constitution?" Collyer said.

McElvain argued that the House could pass new legislation if it disagreed with the administration's changes, which he said were legal under "pre-existing permanent appropriation."

At another point, Collyer admonished McElvain: "You can't just shake your head and not deal with the question."

The lawsuit is one of a flurry filed against the Obama administration in the past few months challenging executive actions on healthcare and immigration as Republicans seek to amp up pressure on the president.

Jonathan Turley, a lawyer for the House Republicans, said the lawsuit should go forward to show the power of the purse "should not be decorative."

The judge, while appearing sympathetic to the Republicans' decision to bring the lawsuit, said she had not yet decided on the standing issue before her.

The case is United States House of Representatives v. Burwell et al, U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, No 14-1967

U.S. Economy Contracted 0.7% in First Quarter // NYT // Nelson D. Schwartz - May 29, 2015

The United States economy got off to an even weaker start this year than first thought, the government reported Friday, as economic activity contracted because of a more dismal trade performance and continued caution by businesses and consumers alike.

The 0.7 percent annual rate of decline in economic output in the first quarter of 2015 was a reversal of the initial 0.2 percent advance for the period reported last month by the Commerce Department.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Although statistical quirks and one-time factors like wintry weather in some parts of the country played a role, as did a work slowdown at West Coast ports, the lackluster report for January, February and March underscores the American economy's continuing inability to generate much momentum.

APRIL 29, 2015

It was unusually cold and snowy in late January and February in the Northeast. A scene from a grocery store parking lot in Cranberry, Pa., on Jan. 26.Economic Trends: How to Make Sense of Weak Economic Growth in 2015APRIL 29, 2015

On the site of a new building in Philadelphia last month. Construction typically slows in winter, one of the seasonal differences that economists are supposed to take into account.

Statistical Puzzle: Dueling Views on the First-Quarter SlumpMAY 19, 2015

The pullback was the third time that economic activity had posted a quarterly contraction since the current recovery began in mid-2009, with declines in output in the first quarters of 2011 and 2014. Even acknowledging flaws in the way the government takes account of expected seasonal variations, that on-again, off-again pattern helps explain why annual growth rates in recent years have been well below the pace of gains recorded in the 1990s and mid-2000s.

Much of the revision reported Friday was spurred by new data showing that exports fell more than first thought and imports rose higher. Economists at Goldman Sachs noted that the change in the trade balance shaved 1.9 percentage points off overall growth last quarter, the largest quarterly drag from net exports in three decades.

Volatile even in the best of times, the trade balance is especially hard to gauge in the wake of a labor dispute and slowdown at West Coast ports. Although the balance was negative in the first quarter, some experts like Ian Shepherdson of Pantheon Macroeconomics say a return to normal trade patterns could propel a healthy rebound in the second quarter.

But he cautioned that the data remained in flux and warned that even his own estimate could end up being wide of the mark.

"Anybody estimating gross domestic product for the second quarter is kidding themselves, because the trade data is so unpredictable at the moment, and we have no hard numbers yet," Mr. Shepherdson said. "I'm guessing there will be a reversal in trade flows, and we'll see 3 percent growth in the second quarter. But it could be anywhere between 1 percent and 5 percent."

Exports had been a particularly bright spot for the American economy in the first years of the recovery, as world trade rebounded from the plunge that followed the financial crisis in late 2008 and early 2009. Those gains have moderated more recently, and are likely to remain under pressure as the stronger dollar makes American goods more expensive for overseas buyers.

Most experts had expected the data released on Friday to show a contraction in the first quarter, and virtually no mainstream economists are predicting that the economy is about to fall into a recession. Still, the weak start for the year is a crucial reason that the Federal Reserve has pulled back from any plans to raise short-term interest rates in June, with officials now suggesting that the first rate increase from near zero is not likely to come until September or even later this year.

Although Wall Street and the Fed are already looking ahead to the June 5 report on employment gains in May and other more recent data, the rearview mirror take on economic activity discouraged buying on the stock market. At the end of trading on Friday, the Dow Jones industrial average, the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index and the Nasdaq were all off 0.6 percent. Bond yields also crept lower.

After the economy grew at an annual rate of nearly 5 percent in the spring and summer of 2014, some experts concluded that the economy had found its footing and predicted that a healthier, sustained growth rate of near 3 percent was finally at hand.

The new data for the first quarter of 2015, and signs of only a tepid rebound in the current quarter, are forcing some economists to rethink earlier assumptions.

"This isn't the off-to-the-races kind of expansion we envisioned six months ago," said Scott Anderson, chief economist at Bank of the West in San Francisco. "More and more folks are coming around to the view that the long-term growth rate of the American economy is 2 percent, at best. We can't sustain 3 or 4 percent growth for very long, so it's two steps forward, one step back."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Although cloudy, the economic outlook is not particularly dark.

Unemployment has been falling steadily, and experts think it could fall to about 5 percent by the end of the year, from 5.4 percent now. The jobless rate stood at 8 percent a little over two years ago.

The real estate market has also been robust as of late, with a measure of pending home sales last month hitting a nine-year high, according to data released Thursday by the National Association of Realtors. New-home sales and construction were also strong in April.

Indeed, an upward revision in residential construction last quarter offset some of the weakness elsewhere.

Despite the windfall provided by lower gasoline prices, consumer spending, which accounts for roughly two-thirds of economic activity, was only modest. Personal consumption rose by 1.8 percent last quarter, down from 4.4 percent in late 2014.

Experts say some of the weakness in the first quarter of the year reflects how the numbers are analyzed by government statisticians to account for seasonal variations, like the retail slowdown that follows the holiday shopping season or business activity that is lowered as temperatures plunge.

That process, known as seasonal adjustment, may indeed have exaggerated the underlying weakness last quarter, according to an analysis by private economists at firms like Barclays and Macroeconomic Advisers, as well as at the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco.

Whatever role that seasonal adjustments did play, however, Mr. Anderson cautioned against dismissing the first-quarter weakness as entirely a statistical quirk.

"Some economists have been trying to explain away the negative numbers," he said. "I don't think it's so easily dismissed. We will get a modest bounce back this quarter."

In particular, he said, the dollar's surge against foreign currencies like the euro is hurting manufacturers and other exporters, a trend that is likely to continue even with the resolution of the West Coast port slowdown.

Although Mr. Anderson expects the annual rate of growth to rebound to above 2 percent this quarter and to about 3 percent in the second half of 2015, that still leaves his estimate at 2.2 percent for the annual growth rate for the year. Last year, the economy grew at an annual rate of 2.4 percent.

"There's some truth to the statistical issues and the one-time factors, but we are still left with a real deceleration," Mr. Anderson said. "Two percent is probably where the economy will gravitate longer term."

INTERNATIONAL

U.S. Says China has Artillery on Artificial Islands // AP // Lolita Baldor - May 29, 2015

SINGAPORE -- Two large artillery vehicles were detected on one of the artificial islands that China is creating in the South China Sea, U.S. officials said Friday, underscoring ongoing concerns that Beijing may try to use the land reclamation projects for military purposes.

The discovery was made at least several weeks ago by the United States, but it's not clear if the weapons are still there or if they have been moved or hidden out of sight, officials said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The revelation comes as Defense Secretary Ash Carter begins an 11-day trip, including several stops in the Asia Pacific. He is slated to speak Saturday at an international security summit here, and is expected to reassert America's views that China and other nations must stop all land reclamation projects in the region.

Pentagon spokesman Brent Colburn said the U.S. was aware of the artillery , but he declined to provide other details, saying it is an intelligence matter. Defense officials described the weapons as self-propelled artillery vehicles, and said they posed no threat to the U.S. or American territories. The officials were not authorized to discuss the matter publicly so spoke on condition of anonymity.

The sighting was first reported by the Wall Street Journal.

U.S. officials, however, have been watching the rapidly expanding land reclamation by China, which, according to estimates, totals more than 2,000 acres in the South China Sea.

The U.S. has been flying surveillance aircraft in the region, prompting China to file a formal protest after a U.S. Navy P-8A Poseidon recently flew over one of the sites.

Carter on Wednesday made it clear that the U.S. will "fly, sail and operate wherever international law allows." But so far he has said little about what the U.S. is willing to do to get China to stop the island construction.

U.S. and other regional officials have expressed concerns about the island building, including worries that it may be a prelude to navigation restrictions or the enforcement of a possible air defense identification zone over the South China Sea. China declared such a zone over disputed Japanese-held islands in the East China Sea in 2013.

Asked about the latest imagery suggesting China had put weapons on one of the land reclamation islands, China's Foreign Ministry spokeswoman Hua Chunying said she is "not aware of the situation you mention, but China has clearly reiterated its position several times on the islands in the South China Sea."

She also pushed back against Carter's criticism, saying that the U.S. should be "rational and calm and stop making any provocative remarks, because such remarks not only do not help ease the controversies in the South China Sea, but they also will aggravate the regional peace and stability."

Carter has been vocal about U.S. opposition to the China construction and on Friday afternoon flew over the crowded Straits of Malacca and Singapore, in part to emphasize the need for continued freedom of navigation in the region.

On board two V-22 Ospreys, Carter and his staff and several members of the media flew over the narrow shipping lanes, which were packed with massive container ships and other vessels.

The busy waterway is "a very striking example of the link between security and prosperity and the importance of having security and stability in the Pacific," said Kelly Magsamen, the Pentagon's principle deputy assistant secretary for Asia Pacific matters.

Colburn, the Pentagon spokesman, added that China's actions in the South China Sea are examples of the types of things that could extend into otherAsia Pacific areas and "could upset the order that has led to the prosperity that the entire region benefits from today."

The Malacca Strait is 550 miles long, but just 1.7 miles wide at its narrowest point. About a third of global shipping moves through the strait -- or about 50,000 ships a year. Any accidental or deliberate blockage of the strait would force ships to switch to longer and more expensive routes.

Chinese Security Laws Elevate the Party and Stifle Dissent. Mao Would Approve // NYT //
Edward Wong - May 30, 2015

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BEIJING — China's new national security law, released in draft form this month, has little to say about such traditional security matters as military power, counterespionage or defending the nation's borders.

Instead, to the surprise and alarm of many people here, it reads more like a Communist Party ideology paper and a call to arms aimed at defending the party's grip on power. The law, together with two other recently published draft laws, constitutes the most expansive articulation yet of President Xi Jinping's vision of national security, and the widest interpretation of threats to the Communist Party and the state since the Mao era.

Analysts say the laws are aimed at giving the security forces and courts greater leeway in muzzling Chinese civil society and corralling the influence of Western institutions and ideas, which Mr. Xi views as a threat.

Deploying the kind of retro-nationalist language that has become standard fare under Mr. Xi, the national security law says security must be maintained in all aspects of society, from culture to education to technology, "to realize the great rejuvenation of the Chinese nation."

"This draft focuses on politics, ideology and culture," said Zhang Xuezhong, a civil rights lawyer and former law professor at East China University of Political Science and Law in Shanghai.

The two other draft laws — also related to what might be described as ideological security — are a so-called counterterrorism law and one aimed at controlling the activities of foreign nongovernmental organizations and their Chinese partners.

More than at any other time since the Communists seized power in 1949, some scholars say, the law is being used in the service of ideology and maintaining party survival.

The draft laws, Mr. Zhang said, "really look like an expression of the conservative political thinking of some party leaders, and the legislative organs are merely trying to realize their thoughts."

Perhaps the most interesting question is why Mr. Xi thinks he needs such laws. Existing laws already enshrine Communist Party power and criminalize any act deemed to encourage "subversion of state power."

But the new laws provide a firmer legal framework for controlling civil society and Western organizations, scholars say.

The most ambitious of the three, the national security law, solidifies Mr. Xi's authority over national security by placing a central organ — likely to be the National Security Commission that Mr. Xi founded — in charge of all security matters. An April 23 article in People's Daily, the official party newspaper, said the new draft of the security law reflected "General Secretary Xi Jinping's spirit."

Another reason Mr. Xi wants these laws is more abstract, scholars say. Party ideology no longer plays a central role in the lives of ordinary Chinese the way it did in the Mao era, so the party needs to promote and institutionalize the ideology by whatever means it can, including by writing it into law. That is especially true under Mr. Xi, who since the day he took office in 2012 has promoted old-school party ideology in a way not seen since the aftermath of the June 1989 crackdown on pro-democracy protests around Tiananmen Square in Beijing.

"The ideology is far thinner and holds the attention of the populace far less powerfully than before," said Stanley B. Lubman, a scholar of Chinese law at the University of California, Berkeley. "As a result, the Chinese Communist Party needs more institutional support than before, and may need even more. This helps to explain the attention that law has recently been receiving since Xi came to power."

The national security law explicitly mentions the need to teach China's 1.3 billion people about the security and ideological needs of the state and the party. One clause commands institutions to "strengthen guidance on news, propaganda and public opinion about national security."

"National security education will be included in the national education system and the public-servant training system to strengthen awareness among the entire populace," the law says. "April 15 of each year will be set aside as national security education day."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Legal analysts say the law is expected to be passed no later than March, when the National People's Congress is to meet in Beijing. It could be passed sooner by the legislature's standing committee, which also has the power to approve laws.

"I think the frame of the national security law fits the current needs of the nation, since national security as a concept has expanded to more areas," said Tong Zhiwei, a professor at the East China University of Political Science and Law. "But I don't agree with some of the wordings in the draft — for example the phrases 'ideological security' and 'cultural security.' "

Ideology and culture are not threats to national security, Mr. Tong added.

Mr. Zhang, the lawyer, said the law was "destined to be abused." With its sanction, he said, "law enforcement officials who want to suppress freedom of speech or set limits on importing foreign publications will be more confident in doing so."

The two other draft laws have even more concrete provisions for controlling civil society and Western institutions; both could be passed as early as this summer. The foreign NGO law proposes that such organizations be registered and regulated by the Public Security Ministry, a step that William Nee, a China researcher with Amnesty International, equates to treating them "as potential criminals."

The law would apply to all nonprofit groups, including schools and artistic organizations. Even those groups with no China operations but who want to hold an event here would have to register with the police.

Before registering, foreign NGOs would have to find an official sponsor. To get official backing and to win the approval of the security ministry, the NGOs would have to drop or severely curtail activities that officials might consider politically suspect, like those aimed at helping China build an independent judicial system, for example.

In addition, funding given by foreign NGOs to "more outspoken" Chinese NGOs would "rapidly dry up," leading to the shutdown of many of those groups, wrote Maya Wang, a researcher with Human Rights Watch. Ms. Wang said the law would affect her group's activities.

Continue reading the main story

The separate draft counterterrorism law calls for, among other things, foreign technology and financial companies to hand over encryption keys to Chinese agencies and install security back doors in technology. President Obama and other American officials are pressing Chinese leaders to drop those requirements.

During his tenure, Mr. Xi has repeatedly cited Han Feizi, a Legalist philosopher from the Warring States period more than 23 centuries ago. The Legalists said autocratic rule should be codified in law rather than having law limit that rule.

A party conference in October laid the foundation for the party's use of the law to justify and reinforce its rule. The conference called for policies promoting "the Socialist rule of law with Chinese characteristics." Legal scholars say the party is appropriating the term "rule of law" for propaganda purposes with no intention of allowing the law to circumscribe the party's authority.

Jerome A. Cohen, a law professor at New York University, said Mr. Xi's "rule of law seems also a vehicle for strengthening the control of central authority over the unruly lower levels of government and all the distorting influences that impact local court decision-making."

On a broader level, he said, "Xi has intensified the uses of legislation and judicial practice as instruments of party ideology and policy in order to impose a more repressive regime than China has witnessed since the June 4 era."

Islamic State claims militants carried out twin blasts at Baghdad hotels // WaPo // Mustafa Salim and Loveday Morris - May 30, 2015

Islamic State militants asserted responsibility Friday for coordinated attacks on two of the Iraqi capital's most upscale hotels. The bombings claimed at least 15 lives as lavish weekend wedding parties were in full swing.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Two cars rigged with explosives blew up within minutes late Thursday night. At least 15 people were killed and 42 wounded, said a security official who spoke on the condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to give out information.

The bombings are likely to shake a revival of Baghdad's nightlife, which followed Prime Minister Haider al-Abadi's lifting of a decade-old midnight curfew in February.

A statement from the Islamic State posted on the Internet claimed that it carried out the attack, which would be one of the group's most high-profile in the capital since the militants took control of much of the country's north last summer.

The statement said an Iraqi operative for the Islamic State parked one car at Baghdad's Cristal Grand Ishtar hotel, then drove another to the $250-a-night Babylon Hotel and blew himself up there.

The Islamic State's frequent suicide bombings normally target Shiite neighborhoods in the city, striking restaurants and busy shopping streets.

Iraqi security officials have linked an increasing pace of bombings in Baghdad to rising pressure on Islamic State militants on the battlefield. Iraq's government security forces and Shiite militias launched an offensive this week to retake the western city of Ramadi from the group.

The first explosion hit the Babylon Hotel in the Jadriya neighborhood, where a bulldozer was scooping up rubble Friday below gaping windows and in front of the destroyed lobby. The hotel, a prominent feature of Baghdad's skyline, faces the U.S. Embassy and Baghdad's fortified Green Zone across the Tigris River.

Security camera footage of the attack broadcast on Sumaria television shows what the report claimed was the vehicle carrying the explosives entering the hotel through its security gate — where it is waved on without being checked. Another camera shows the car accelerating toward the hotel lobby.

Furqan Ali, 28, who works in a nearby restaurant, described scenes of chaos as the explosion blew out the restaurant's windows and workers fled the area of the hotel. Security guards on the gate normally use sniffer dogs, he said, speculating that the bomber had inside help to get through the gate's normally stringent checks.

The Babylon, run by Warwick International Hotels, had reopened this year after a major refurbishment — including a new swimming pool and spa. It was frequented by foreign businessmen.

The second blast hit near the Cristal Grand Ishtar, formerly the Sheraton. After the blast, black smoke could be seen snaking into the night sky amid the rattle of gunfire and the wailing of ambulance sirens.

The hotel's manager, Faez al-Sufer, said that the driver had sneaked the vehicle in with a wedding convoy while multiple celebrations crammed the hotel's function rooms on the first night of the weekend.

"On Thursday, there's a lot of pressure because of visitors to the nightclub and wedding parties," he said. "The checking and security procedures were thorough."

The car with the explosives was left in the hotel's parking lot, he said, and parts of its engine were later found on the hotel's sixth floor. At least 30 cars were destroyed, he said. The twisted, blackened hulks littered the parking lot Friday.

Ninety rooms were damaged, the manager said, putting the total cost at about $4 million.

But he said the hotel would still open its doors to wedding parties Friday night. "We will keep challenging the terrorists," he said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sufer said that no one had died in the attack but that at least 10 security guards were injured.

A third bomb was found and defused in the Babylon's parking lot, said Saad Maan, a spokesman for Iraq's Interior Ministry.

"They are choosing famous hotels in Baghdad to get attention," Maan said. "This is part of their strategy."

Sunni extremists have a history of attacking the Iraqi capital's most prominent hotels.

In 2010, the Babylon and the Sheraton were hit in a coordinated bombing attack. The Hamra Hotel, often frequented by journalists, was also targeted and never reopened. At least 36 people were killed in those attacks.

OPINIONS/EDITORIALS/BLOGS

Why Baltimore Blew Up // Rolling Stone // Matt Taibbi - May 26, 2015

When Baltimore exploded in protests a few weeks ago following the unexplained paddy-wagon death of a young African-American man named Freddie Gray, America responded the way it usually does in a race crisis: It changed the subject.

Instead of using the incident to talk about a campaign of hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of illegal searches and arrests across decades of discriminatory policing policies, the debate revolved around whether or not the teenagers who set fire to two West Baltimore CVS stores after Gray's death were "thugs," or merely wrongheaded criminals.

From Eric Garner to Michael Brown to Akai Gurley to Tamir Rice to Walter Scott and now Freddie Gray, there have now been so many police killings of African-American men and boys in the past calendar year or so that it's been easy for both the media and the political mainstream to sell us on the idea that the killings are the whole story.

Fix that little in-custody death problem, we're told, perhaps with the aid of "better training" or body cameras (which Baltimore has already promised to install by the end of the year), and we can comfortably go back to ignoring poverty, race, abuse, all that depressing inner-city stuff. But body cameras won't fix it. You can't put body cameras on a system.

As a visit to post-uprising Baltimore confirms, high-profile police murders are only part of the problem. An equally large issue is the obscene quantity of smaller daily outrages and abuses that regularly go unpunished by a complex network of local criminal-justice bureaucracies, many of which are designed to cover up bad police work and keep all our worst behaviors hidden, even from ourselves.

Go to any predominantly minority neighborhood in any major American city and you'll hear the same stories: decades of being sworn at, thrown against walls, kicked, searched without cause, stripped naked on busy city streets, threatened with visits from child protective services, chased by dogs, and arrested and jailed not merely on false pretenses, but for reasons that often don't even rise to the level of being stupid.

"I can guarantee if you look up here and look down there, it might be five people who ain't been fucked over by the police," says Baltimore resident Shaun Young, waving a hand at a crowd of maybe a hundred people gathered at Penn and North, site of the protests. "It's small shit — they get taken advantage of."

A. Dwight Pettit, a legendary African-American civil rights lawyer in Baltimore, says he and others in the city's legal community stopped pursuing what he calls "simple civil rights violations" years ago: the verbal-abuse cases, the humiliating cavity searches conducted in public, the non-lethal beatings. "We were dumping them on each other," he says. "But we had to stop. There were just too many."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Most Americans have never experienced this kind of policing. They haven't had to stare down the barrel of a service revolver drawn for no reason at a routine stop. They haven't had their wife and kids put on an ice-cold sidewalk curb while cops ran their license plate. They haven't ever been told to get the fuck back in their car right now, been accused of having too prominent a "bulge," had their dog shot and their kids handcuffed near its body during a wrong-door raid, watched their seven-year-old dragged to jail for sitting on a dirt bike, or dealt with any of a thousand other positively crazy things nonwhite America has come to expect from an interaction with law enforcement. "It's everywhere," says Christen Brown, who as a 24-year-old city parks employee was allegedly roughed up and arrested just for filming police in a parking lot. "You can be somewhere minding your business and they will find their best way to fuck with you, point blank. It's blatant disrespect."

This system, now standard in almost all of urban America, is Mayberry on one side and trending Moscow or 1980s South Africa on the other. Why? Because America loves to lie to itself about race. It's able to do so for many reasons, including the little-discussed fact that most white people have literally no social interactions with black people, so they don't hear about this every day.

Police brutality is tough to talk about because white and black America see the issue so differently, with white Americans still overwhelmingly supportive and trustful of law enforcement. But the current controversy is as much about how modern law-enforcement practices have ruined the job of policing as it is about racism. There are plenty of good cops out there, but the way policing works in cities like Baltimore, the bad ones can thrive. And disasters aren't just more likely, they're inevitable.

Baltimore is like a lot of American cities. It has a small, spiffy-looking downtown with a couple of nice ballparks and some Zagat-listed restaurants for the tourists to visit. But outside those few blocks, much of it is a dead zone. Whole sections of town are packed with crumbling, trash-infested row houses, and this pothole-strewn mess is where people are somehow expected to live. The drug trade has historically dominated Baltimore's ghettos. But the city is so screwed these days, jokes one African-American resident, that "even the drug game is dead."

It's against the backdrop of abandoned cityscapes like this that the current policing controversy rages. The king of modern enforcement strategies, Broken Windows, isn't designed to promote economic growth in these neighborhoods. It's designed to prevent the "bad" neighborhoods from spilling into the "good" ones.

Broken Windows policing, which gained renown in the Nineties thanks to politicians like former New York Mayor Rudy Giuliani, is the mutant offspring of our already infamous race history, a set of high-tech tricks to disguise old-school discriminatory policing as cheery-sounding, yuppie-approved, Malcolm Gladwell-endorsed pop sociology. The ideas grew out of a theory advanced in 1982 by a pair of academics, James Q. Wilson of Harvard and George Kelling of Rutgers. "If a window in a building is broken and is left unrepaired, all the rest of the windows will soon be broken," the pair wrote in The Atlantic, arguing in "Broken Windows" that disorder and crime were "inextricably linked" and that fixing the former would impact the latter.

The practical application of these ideas was simple. In the interest of public order, cops would stop people in troubled neighborhoods for any infraction, no matter how minor — a broken taillight, a hopped turnstile, an open beer — in hopes of deterring more-serious crimes.

Broken Windows was introduced in New York in 1990, when a Bostonian named Bill Bratton was named the city's Transit Police chief. At the time, New York was plagued by street crime, with a murder rate north of 2,000 killings a year. Any idea that seemed like it had half a chance of working seemed like a good idea.

After Giuliani made Bratton his police commissioner in 1994, the two men took the Broken Windows approach to the next level. New terms entered the lexicon — "zero tolerance," "stop-and-frisk," "community policing" (an Orwellian euphemism every bit as preposterous as the Clear Skies and Healthy Forests initiatives dreamed up by the Bush administration). These new, more interventionist strategies relied on endless streams of adversarial interactions between police and the subject population, stopping and sometimes searching people by the thousands.

Soon, the crime rate began to decline sharply, and the media rushed to laud Giuliani and Bratton for slaying the criminal dragon. Time put Bratton on its cover, dressed in a trench coat and standing at night on a New York street conspicuously empty of anything but a squad car. The headline: "Finally, We're Winning the War Against Crime." Of course, there would later be a tremendous controversy over whether these new policing strategies had anything to do with the drop in New York's crime rate. Other cities that didn't use these programs saw similar declines, in a phenomenon that criminologists are still at a loss to explain.

Bratton instituted a statistics-based system called CompStat, which required precinct captains to give regular reports to their superiors about numbers of arrests, stops and searches. As retired police Capt. Ernie Naspretto explained in a piece for the Daily News years later, it wasn't enough to merely say you were out there on the street, executing mass numbers of field interrogations. "If it ain't on paper, it ain't," he wrote. "Stop-and-frisk became a means for us to show we were still fighting crime."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For the officer on the ground, stop-and-frisk meant a commitment to a new, highly interventionist kind of policing, and one that was inherently discriminatory. Sgt. Anthony Miranda is a retired New York police officer and president of the National Latino Officers Association. He's a tall, powerfully built man who has the air of someone whose sheer size makes telling the blunt truth easier. He recalls a story from the early Eighties about how New York developed its two-faced zero-tolerance enforcement policy, one that would be imitated all over the country.

He walked a beat in a predominantly Jewish neighborhood in Brooklyn. During the High Holidays, he explains, many residents in the area refrained from using electricity or doing certain tasks, and police traditionally helped. But he was with a group of younger cops who didn't want to just stand around. "So we used to go out there, and if you were parked illegally, bang, you summonsed them," Miranda says. "We were doing what cops were used to doing — giving activity," he adds, referring to tickets and arrests.

After doing that a few times, all of the young cops got called in. "They lined everybody up on the street, had commanding officers come down, and they said, 'You're not out here to give summonses. You're not out here to make arrests. You're out here for armed presence.'"

Miranda remembered that story later on when Broken Windows started under Giuliani. Like a lot of police officers, Miranda liked the idea at first. Broken Windows, he says, seemed like a good tool to bring a crisis situation under control. But after a while, the emergency abated, crime went down, and what he was left staring at as a police officer was a discrepancy. In affluent neighborhoods, that is, generally, white neighborhoods, police tended to show up only when they had no choice. "Domestic violence, a guy firing a weapon, a car accident," he says. "Cases where, if a cop ends up responding, he has to take some action." But, Miranda says, you weren't supposed to go looking for reasons to arrest people in those neighborhoods.

But in poorer neighborhoods, cops weren't waiting for people to call 911 — they were, in police parlance, "self-initiating" the action. "If it's Bed-Stuy or some poor neighborhood in the middle of a ghetto," he says, "it could be a Catholic church and they'll find the priest and bang the shit out of him with summonses."

The sociological idea behind Broken Windows was pitched as something much more benign, of course. It was supposed to be the government version of tough love. And it was an easy sell politically, particularly to white and upper-class New York. From the point of view of the uptown crowd, it was a cheaper solution to urban decay than creating jobs. It also had the advantage of blaming the subject population for the rot and destruction of crime.

The legal precedent for these policies dates back to a 1968 Supreme Court case called Terry v. Ohio, in which the high court ruled that police may approach, search and demand to see the identification of any person the officer has an "articulable" suspicion has committed, or is about to commit, a crime. Although the court ruled that this "suspicion" needed to be more than a mere policeman's hunch and must be based on "articulable facts," the reality is that a) Sherlock Holmes, Thurgood Marshall and Miss Cleo put together couldn't tell you what qualifies as the "articulable" suspicion of a beat cop, and b) this decades-old precedent case essentially transferred the power of the state into the minds of street-level patrol officers.

Giuliani and Bratton, and later Bratton's successor, Howard Safir, made themselves famous crime fighters by vastly increasing the scope and number of such "Terry stops." Sweep up everyone, see what shakes out.

Community policing sounds harmless, like they were just sending patrolmen out to chat with old ladies on stoops about which neighborhood trees were most dangerous for cats. But in practice, it meant sending cops by the thousands into tough neighborhoods to, as Miranda says, "bang the shit" out of locals. Police braced people on sidewalks and in alleyways, asked for IDs, executed pat-downs, turned pockets inside out and emptied pad after pad of summonses.

A City University of New York professor eloquently described the mission creep of Broken Windows last year. "If the problem is a broken window, they should fix the window," professor Steve Zeidman told Reuters. "But somehow we don't fix the window, we just arrest people who start hanging out by the broken window."

At the policy's height, in 2011, New York cops were stopping more than 680,000 people a year (around 89 percent of whom were nonwhite, in a city whose population is more than half white) and issuing upward of half a million summonses a year. Though a landmark 2013 ruling by federal judge Shira Scheindlin would ostensibly outlaw the stop-and-frisk policies, many other cities — among them Philadelphia, Seattle, New Orleans and Boston — would create their own aggressive policing policies. "What New York developed," says Miranda, "was the blueprint other states followed." Smaller towns also adopted it, some with especial verve. A Miami exurb called Miami Gardens executed more than 99,000 stops in a five-year period, and reportedly stopped the same black man 258 times — including dozens of inexplicable arrests for trespassing at the convenience store where he worked.

Bratton moved to Los Angeles in 2002 and promptly launched a similar program there. By 2008, L.A. was making more than 870,000 stops a year, a rate significantly higher than was ever seen in New York. Chicago, too, was recently found to still be stopping people at a rate four times higher than New York at its peak.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Then, of course, there is Baltimore. When onetime Mayor Martin O'Malley launched his own zero-tolerance campaign in the early 2000s, he did so under circumstances similar to those faced by Giuliani and Bratton in New York in the early Nineties. Baltimore was, in O'Malley's words, the "most violent, addicted and abandoned city in America," held back by an exploding crime problem.

Though academics were already claiming that stop-and-frisk tactics didn't work, those critiques didn't yet enjoy the consensus they do now. In fact, stop-and-frisk wasn't just still hot at the time, it was intellectual chic. In 2000, America's leading fast-food philosopher, Malcolm Gladwell, helped launch his career on the back of a half-baked analysis of Broken Windows in a book called The Tipping Point.

So when O'Malley started his version of Broken Windows, he had a mandate, and it's not surprising that Baltimore's program was wildly aggressive. At its peak, in 2005, an incredible 108,000 of the city's 600,000 residents were arrested. Later on, critics like The Wire creator David Simon, would describe O'Malley's police department as obsessed by statistics, determined to produce crime-reduction rates that were "unsustainable without manipulation." The emphasis on stats, Simon said, "destroyed police work," forcing cops into the roles not of investigators and protectors, but of strong-armers bent on producing numbers above all else. Zero tolerance also forced cops to behave in ways that were virtually guaranteed to piss people off on a mass scale.

The policy was ostensibly dialed back in court thanks to a joint NAACP and ACLU lawsuit filed in 2006. But Baltimore remains a place where police stop pedestrians, ask them for ID and sometimes take them for rides if they give the wrong answers. "First thing they say is, 'Gimme your ID,'" says Malik Ansar, 44, who's standing on the corner of Penn and North in the days after Freddie Gray's death. "They look and say, 'Oh, you live in ZIP code 21227. What you doing way over here?'"

Ansar points at a run-down town house behind him. "You can tell him you were born in this house right here. They don't care. They say, 'You live here now?' And you say, 'No, man, I moved outta here 17 years ago.' And they say, 'What the fuck you doing here now?'"

The way residents like Ansar describe it, if you're not at the address listed on a photo ID, you go into the paddy wagon. But if you run, it's worse. "Then, it's an ass-whipping," says a nearby bystander. "Believe me, Freddie [Gray] knew he was gonna get an ass-whipping if he got caught. . . . Everybody knows that. It may not be a real bad one, but you gonna get one."

So most people go along, which at minimum is a huge waste of time. Ansar's friend, who goes by the name of Big T, says if you get picked up at lunchtime, you're lucky if you make it to central booking by five. You spend the whole freaking day in that hot, cramped van.

And once you get to booking? "You're spending the night," says Big T. "It's just them saying, 'We're gonna get you.'"

Many of these "cases" of loitering, or disorderly conduct, or whatever, never amount to anything, and if they do, get dropped as soon as anyone with half a brain and a law degree sees the charging papers. But the endless regimen of street interrogations and "long rides" serves its own moronic purpose, being a clumsy, bluntly illegal method of intimidating residents and searching whole neighborhoods without probable cause.

"They hoping that a warrant pop," says Ansar of the trips to central booking. "And then they hoping that your ass don't be coming around here no more. Because the police be trying to build a reputation."

People are focused on how violative these policies are to the population, but the flip side is that this high-volume, low-yield approach to enforcement is a terrible policy for good cops, too. "Right now, it's like they're saying, 'We have a robbery problem, and we fixed it,'" says Miranda. "Actually, no, you didn't fix it, you just arrested everybody. It's lazy policing."

As fig leaves go, articulable suspicion is a particularly skimpy one, as multiple studies of these tactics have shown. In Newark, for instance, a Department of Justice investigation found that more than 60 percent of police stops failed to articulate reasonable suspicion. An ACLU study of Chicago's stop-and-frisk program found officers routinely cited bogus reasons like a prior arrest or an observable "bulge" as their articulable suspicion.

You can do the math yourself. If cities like Chicago and Los Angeles and New York were, or are, routinely stopping and questioning more than half a million people a year, and if as many as half of those stops lack real cause, then at minimum we're talking millions of potentially illegal incidents.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Decades into this campaign of organized harassment, the worst thing that happened to the cops who stopped thousands upon thousands of people with no good reason was that they started to become the subject of academic studies. In 2013, New York University examined the data relating to CompStat and the Broken Windows arrests and concluded that they had little to no impact on the crime rate.

Despite such conclusions and lawsuit rulings that declared these programs discriminatory, nobody was ever punished. Giuliani didn't show up in Bed-Stuy with a fruit basket. Malcolm Gladwell didn't have to give back his Tipping Point royalties. And nobody had to apologize.

Lack of consequence rarely goes unnoticed in big bureaucracies. So it's hardly surprising that police started crossing a new line: inventing reasons not just for stops and searches but for arrests.

Twenty-year-old Jaleel Fields lives in an East New York project not far from the one where Akai Gurley — if you're keeping score, he was the young black man killed after Michael Brown and before Walter Scott — was shot in a stairwell by a rookie officer last fall. Fields' case is typical in most ways, which is why you didn't hear about it.

A thin young man with a quick sense of humor, Fields was heading to the grocery store in February 2013 and made the mistake of getting into an elevator with two police officers. A civil complaint he later filed describes how the problem started when he laughed as the police argued with another young man in the elevator.

Police claimed that Fields blocked the elevator door, then made things worse after he left the elevator by elbowing a police officer, hiding his hands and struggling. Fields' story is different. "He just came, pushed me straight back to the corner," he says. "He's like, 'Oh, you think you could bump a cop and get away with it?' I looked at him like, 'What? I ain't touch no cop. I ain't touch no cop. What are you talking about?' "

Fields got charged for resisting arrest, attempted assault in the third degree, disorderly conduct, and harassment in the second degree. He had to spend a day in jail. No one outside his family and friends would ever know a thing about this case, except for the atypical part of the narrative, which was that the action in the elevator was captured on video. (The NYPD says it can't comment on a sealed case.) The video clearly shows that Jaleel Fields not only didn't block the elevator door, he expressly stepped aside to let people on and off and stood in a corner for most of the ride. Fields' real crime seems to have been laughing near a couple of cops.

f you live in the other America where this stuff doesn't go on, and you didn't know the context of these "self-initiated contacts," you might look at Jaleel Fields, and his arrest for resisting, and think he was a criminal. You might especially think that if you didn't see the video. "Most people think that there's a high burden for getting arrested, because maybe for them, there is," says Martha Grieco, Fields' attorney. "But they don't pick up kids in these neighborhoods because they do anything. They pick them up as a form of social control. . . . We want your fingerprints in the system. We want your iris scans in the system. We want to know your tattoos."

You can walk into any public defender's office in the country and find stacks of arrest reports in which police say they saw something that common sense tells you almost certainly couldn't be. There is even a name for it: "test-a-lying." One lawyer tells a story of police smelling weed in a closed Ziploc bag from some 150 feet away. Another is representing the estate of a man, ultimately shot by police, who authorities said marched into a state police barracks reeking of marijuana ("Because everybody smokes a huge joint before they go to the police station," the attorney says, noting that no marijuana was found in the victim's system at autopsy). A third has a handful of clients who all apparently made furtive motions in the direction of an officer's gun. "It must be epidemic in New York, these furtive movements for police guns," he says.

Against the Fieldses of the world, the lies of police officers generally work as intended: as effective pretexts to get people searched or fingerprinted and create real criminal records. But the lies almost never cut the other way. In city after city, the laws are set up to make police misconduct of any kind, from a lie in an arrest report all the way up to outright brutality, disappear down a variety of bureaucratic rabbit holes.

Say you live in a large American city — Baltimore, for example. Police stop and search you, something goes wrong and you end up getting your ass kicked. You don't die, and more to the point, nobody films you not dying, which means CNN doesn't show up the next day.

You're hauled off to jail. Sometime between a few hours and a few days later, you learn the charges against you. It's usually a hell of a list, which is part of the game. On what Ansar describes as "that motherfucking paper they slide under the door," you might find yourself charged with resisting arrest, assault against a police officer, criminal possession of marijuana, criminal possession of a weapon, reckless endangerment and whatever else the on-scene officers can think of.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The case is weak, however, so a few days or weeks later a prosecutor tells you charges will be dropped. In being processed, you sign a paper. It reads:

I, (name), hereby release and forever discharge (complainant) and (law enforcement agency), all its officers, agents and employees, and any and all other persons from any and all claims which I may have for wrongful conduct by reason of my arrest, detention, or confinement on or about (date).

This General Waiver and Release is conditioned upon the expungement of the record of my arrest. . . .

You sign, and your "criminal record" disappears, which is great for you. But so does the incident, which is expunged from the public record. And, except in very rare cases, the same police go right back out on the street. The only results of the entire episode are things that can hurt you: Your prints might now be in the system, you might attract future attention by the same police, and your employer might be upset by the whole situation.

This expungement trick is the way it works in Baltimore. To make the charges go away, victims often end up overtly forfeiting a right to sue (by signing a paper to that effect) or effectively doing so by pleading guilty to lesser offenses (undercutting, say, any federal civil rights case they might later want to bring).

If a Baltimore case is bad enough to warrant a financial settlement, the gory details usually end up disappeared behind a nondisclosure agreement. A. Dwight Pettit and Baltimore trial lawyer Larry Greenberg can't tell me about most of their worst cases, because they're sealed. In other words, if the victim takes the city's money after a beating or a false arrest, then the city typically gets to dispose of the incident without apologizing or even publicly acknowledging it.

It's the street-level equivalent of the "neither admit nor deny" settlements that Wall Street offenders made infamous after 2008. A bad thing happens, but somehow nobody is guilty of anything — money just changes hands.

But here's the next catch: It's not much money. There's a liability cap in place in the state of Maryland, limiting victims to $200,000 per person, $500,000 per incident (though there are plans to roughly double those amounts). Other states, like Pennsylvania, Illinois and Colorado, have similar caps.

On the streets of Baltimore last week, African-American residents were furiously repeating the statistic about the city paying out more than $6 million in abuse settlements since 2011. But that number is actually quite small. In New York, which does not have a cap, abuse victims have received more than $420 million since 2009.

But even getting to a settlement is contingent upon the victim acting quickly. In the city of Baltimore, a victim has to file notice of a suit within six months. There are plans to expand that limit to a year, but it's still a tight window. If you don't hire a lawyer right away, you're probably not going to make the deadline.

The game is set up so the only real end for the victim of police abuse to pursue is a check from the government. This brings us to the most shocking and probably most under-reported aspect of the police-abuse story: In most cities it's close to impossible to get a police officer removed for lies, abuse or other forms of misconduct.

A grotesque example is Chicago, where statistics about police abuse leaked out via a civil lawsuit called Bond v. Utreras. In that case, it was revealed that in a two-year period between 2002 and 2004, Chicago police received 10,149 complaints of misconduct, which resulted in only 19 total acts of meaningful discipline (defined as a suspension of seven days or more).

A similar statistical pattern emerged in New York, where after last year's Eric Garner case, the NYPD's Inspector General's office and its Civilian Complaint Review Board both conducted evaluations of chokehold incidents. The upshot of the reports is that between 2009 and the first half of 2014, New Yorkers complained of 1,048 incidents involving chokeholds, which had been banned by the NYPD for more than a decade. Of those complaints, the CCRB "substantiated" only 10. And none of those offending officers saw significant repercussions.

The reason for this is that unless a police officer is criminally indicted after an abuse case, which very rarely happens, the discipline procedure at big-city police departments is generally handled in-house. In New York, a civilian complaint usually has to be substantiated by a review panel, which will either suggest punishment itself or refer the case to a pseudo-court at the police department. There, judges — who are employed by the department — may recommend discipline. But many of these recommendations can be overturned by the police commissioner.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

What this means for the people on the streets of urban neighborhoods is simple: For all the hundreds of millions of dollars paid out by cities to abuse victims, very little is actually done to discipline rogue police officers. Cops caught lying in court by judges are not fired. They're back in court giving evidence the next day. "The downside [to lying] for the police is just that the evidence gets tossed," says Pettit, who notes that the problem is especially pronounced in civil courts. "There's no personal accountability. There's no reason not to lie again."

This problem — of police almost never facing consequences — was the obvious subtext of the Baltimore revolts. It's the reason the one thing that calmed the city down was the curiously rapid decision by the new state's attorney, Marilyn Mosby, to file sweeping charges, including manslaughter and murder, against the six police, three white and three black, involved with Gray's arrest.

Pettit notes that Mosby's decision was a rarity in that three of the officers were also charged with false imprisonment. She essentially described the entire arrest as improper and illegal, even going so far as to assert publicly that the pocket knife Gray was carrying was legal. The legal fight to come will therefore put the entire rationale behind Broken Windows on trial, in the sense that prosecutors will argue — if the case actually makes it to court — that the six officers never should have been doing what police have been asked to do in mass numbers every day for 15 years now.

f an individual police officer does have a record of abuse or lies or some other misconduct, most cities make it nearly impossible for anyone on the wrong side of the blue wall to find it.

Every regional police force is governed by its own legal procedure, but New York and California offer excellent examples of the uphill climb toward transparency. In both of those states, a defense lawyer staring at what looks like a bogus police statement has to file a motion to the court asking for disclosure of a police officer's personnel file. In New York, it's called a Gissendanner motion; in California, a Pitchess motion. But to win these motions, you essentially need to have that information already. It's yet another Catch-22. "In 99 percent of these cases, I get nothing," says Nikhil Ramnaney, a Los Angeles defense attorney, stressing that he can't speak for others' experiences.

"Police are always complaining about the 'Don't snitch!' campaigns," says a Baltimore resident named Kato Simeto, an aspiring clothes designer and inventor. "But you almost never see police informing on each other. They're more into 'Don't snitch' than people on the street."

Of course, where bureaucracy fails to cover things up, simple racism often steps in. Just ask Makia Smith, a 33-year-old accountant who grew up not far from where the Baltimore protests broke out. "I was on my way back from Wendy's," she says, recounting an incident in East Baltimore from March 2012. "My two-year-old daughter was in the back, in a car seat."

Caught in traffic, Smith noticed a commotion, with a gang of police officers surrounding a young suspect. As she later alleged in a civil complaint, the boy was on the ground and one of the cops seemed to be getting dangerously aggressive. Concerned, Smith opened the door of her car and held up her phone as though filming the scene. "I was hoping that if they saw me," she says, "then maybe they would stop doing what they were doing."

Instead, she alleges, the following took place: An officer, later identified as Nathan Church, rushed at her, screaming, she says, "You want to film something, bitch? Film this!" Frightened, Smith tried to get back in her car. Church took her phone, smashed it on the ground and kicked it down the street. Then he dragged her out by her hair, at which point she momentarily blacked out. Eventually, she claims, police threw her on the hood of her Saturn, where she snapped awake and saw her two-year-old wailing in the back seat. She began to panic: If she got arrested, who would take care of the baby?

According to Smith's complaint, police told her, in about the least reassuring manner possible, that child protective services was coming to take her daughter. It's an example of how completely black America distrusts the police and the government that Smith chose to allow a little girl standing on the side of the road, a stranger, to take her baby for her, rather than give the child to CPS. As she was dragged off to that seemingly omnipresent paddy wagon, Smith called out her mother's cellphone number, so that the little girl could get in touch with the baby's grandmother.

Smith ended up in jail overnight and didn't reunite with her daughter until 24 hours later. Playing the usual game of police-abuse chicken, authorities hit her with a list of charges, ranging from assault in the second degree against a police officer ("They say I took on four healthy male officers," she says), to resisting, to a host of traffic offenses.

Smith, an educated young woman, did everything right after the incident, hiring a lawyer and successfully navigating the traps and land mines designed to make cases like hers go away. She never signed away her right to sue, never allowed the case to be expunged, never took a pennies-on-the-dollar deal that would have let the police off the hook.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And what happened? The police denied her allegations, claiming the arrest was legitimate, and she watched her case implode in what's supposed to be the corruption-proof stage of the process, a trial by a jury of her "peers."

"The cops' defense team struck every black witness," she says, and her case was heard by an all-white jury, which ultimately found the police innocent of misconduct.

Broken Windows has left a major footprint on modern American society, primarily on the 65 million or so people who have criminal records in this country. That's a population roughly the size of France.

You can easily find the collateral damage from this vast illegal war on crime just by walking into certain neighborhoods and asking. From bad arrests to beatings to broken bones, there are enough horror stories to fill a thousand Ken Burns documentaries. But good luck finding any of that misconduct and abuse on an official record. What you mostly find when you search are a lot of convictions and a whole lot of statistical noise. The dirt, as it often is in this country, is mostly hidden away.

The real problem with Broken Windows is that it brings the same attitude to neighborhoods that corrections officers bring to prisons. "You have guys locked up for serious crimes, you're supposed to be controlling them," says Anthony Miranda. "But in neighborhoods, you're not supposed to be controlling people. You're supposed to be working with them. You're supposed to be serving them. And that attitude is what's missing."

As a former minority officer, Miranda says he and others like him are especially motivated to find solutions: "We're on both sides. We're in the force, but we also live in these neighborhoods. So we need to find an answer."

But the numbers game has rotted the police system to the point where it can't see the forest for the trees. "They don't see it," says Miranda. "They're too ignorant, and it's a shame."

It's Not Closing Time on American Exceptionalism // RCP // Jay Timmons - May 30, 2015

Today, manufacturing in the United States is experiencing a renaissance. It remains an economic powerhouse, propelling prosperity and the American dream forward.

Manufacturing contributes more than $2 trillion to the economy annually -- or 12 percent of the Gross Domestic Product -- and every manufacturing dollar adds $1.37 to our economy.

Last year, U.S.-manufactured exports reached an all-time high. Exports now support more than 6 million manufacturing jobs across the country, and family-owned manufacturers account for more than 96 percent of all U.S. exporters.

The good news is manufacturers in the United States make goods the rest of the world wants. But with export growth slowing, sustaining our momentum hinges upon expanding and strengthening our ability to compete in the global marketplace.

That’s why the Export-Import Bank is so important.

The purpose of the bank is to provide loans, loan guarantees and insurance, which are not provided by commercial banks, to thousands of small and medium-sized companies that need this kind of targeted support the most. Without the bank, many aspiring manufacturers in the United States would find themselves excluded from a global economy where the odds are increasingly stacked against them.

The level of support our international competitors receive dwarfs what the Export-Import Bank gives U.S. manufacturers. Consider these facts: our global competitors use more than 60 other export credit agencies. China alone provides at least five times more support for its exporters than what U.S. exporters get from the bank.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Meanwhile, the Export-Import Bank directly impacts just 2 percent of U. S. imports – and still yields big dividends.

In just the past five years, the bank has supported 1.2 million jobs. And, all the while, the bank has paid for itself by charging fees and interest.

The bank is a targeted tool -- a last resort to help businesses find a foothold in an increasingly competitive marketplace.

Unfortunately, the crucial role played by the Export-Import Bank is not as well understood or appreciated, as it should be. As a result, the future of the important jobs-creating tool is now a hostage to Washington beltway politics.

Legislation to reauthorize the bank is stalled in Congress. The short-term extension under which the bank has been operating expires June 20.

As Congress debates, manufacturers are suffering.

They plan months if not years ahead when it comes to bringing a new product to market. They cannot commit to new product development if they have no assurance the bank will still be here. And new business, critical to American jobs, won't materialize.

The question facing us is elementary.

Do we want U.S. manufacturers to win overseas, or do we want our foreign competitors and their workers to swoop in and seize these opportunities?

Failing to reauthorize the Export-Import Bank is tantamount to unilateral economic disarmament.

All manufacturers and all businesses must step up and educate our leaders in Washington, who have an opportunity to lead us in the direction of more jobs, more opportunity, more prosperity, and greater hope for all Americans. They must not allow us to cede our mantle of economic leadership to our competitors abroad.

Our manufacturing achievements today are dwarfed by tomorrow's untapped possibilities. To achieve those possibilities, we need better access to the 95 percent of the world's population and the more than 70 percent of the world's purchasing power beyond our borders.

The Export-Import Bank can help us secure that great vision.

The bank is a small entity meeting its mission efficiently and effectively. Only a long-term reauthorization will give manufacturers the boost they need. The time for kicking the can down the road through patchwork solutions is over.

Our leaders have a choice to make: Is the time of American exceptionalism over, or do our nation's best days still ahead of us?

It is past time to do the right thing.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Hudson Institute" <info@hudson.org>
To:	podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date:	1/28/2016 11:30:04 AM
Subject:	News from Hudson: Putin's Russia, Rep. McCaul on Homeland Security, Iraq-Iran Connections, Bolstering the U.S. Navy, and more

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Kristina Schake" <kristinakschake@gmail.com>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com> "Robert Mook" <robbymook2015@gmail.com> "Cheryl Mills" <cheryl.mills@gmail.com> "Jake Sullivan" <jake.sullivan@gmail.com> "Jen Palmieri" <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com> "Margolis, Jim" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com> "Joel Benenson" <jbenenson@bsgco.com> "Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com> "John Anzalone" <john@alqpolling.com> "Nick Merrill" <nmerrill.hrco@gmail.com>
Date:	3/11/2015 5:26:37 AM
Subject:	Proactive Plan--Next Steps

I know we have a meeting tomorrow to talk about our proactive press strategy for the next month, but we want to move quickly on some tactics over the next 24 hours to get on offense and take the reins. The Iran statement yesterday was very successful, so we want to keep running with that. We would like to take advantage of Jindal's call on all candidates, on both sides, to sign the Cotton letter. Our proposal is to have her respond in a tweet saying the letter is reckless and no one considering running for president should sign this. We would do this early this afternoon to get in tonight's news.

To discuss on today's 5 pm media call, a second step recommendation is a letter from her to Gowdy asking that he immediately release the 300 emails and that she will testify at any time.

Time Magazine story on Jindal:

A pair of Republican governors eyeing the White House are supporting a controversial letter sent by Republican Senators to the Iranian government warning against an emerging nuclear deal.

Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal led the effort Tuesday, calling on all Republican presidential candidates to support the letter, organized by Sen. Tom Cotton, which has drawn the ire of the Obama administration.

Signed by 47 GOP Senators, including presidential contenders Marco Rubio, Lindsey Graham, Ted Cruz, and Rand Paul, the Monday letter warned the Iranian government that the next president would not be bound by the agreement. He was followed shortly after by former Texas Gov. Rick Perry.

“Every single person thinking about running for President, on both sides, should sign on to this letter to make clear to Iran that they are negotiating with a lame duck President,” Jindal said in a statement released by his political group America Next. “Make no mistake – any Iran deal that President Obama makes is not binding on a future president.”

The White House condemned the letter, with Vice President Joe Biden penning a harsh statement Monday evening, calling it an unprecedented encroachment on the president’s ability to conduct foreign policy. “This letter sends a highly misleading signal to friend and foe alike that that our Commander-in-Chief cannot deliver on America's commitments—a message that is as false as it is dangerous," he said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Later Tuesday, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker said in a statement that any deal with Iran should be subject to congressional review, echoing the letter's argument that the next president would "not be bound" by any agreement struck by President Obama. He did not directly address the letter, however.

Likewise, Former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush said in a statement to TIME that he understood the senators' decision, but didn't explicitly say if he supported it.

"The Senators are reacting to reports of a bad deal that will likely enable Iran to become a nuclear state over time," he said in a statement. "They would not have been put in this position had the Administration consulted regularly with them rather than ignoring their input."

A spokesperson for Chris Christie did not immediately comment on whether their likely-candidates would sign on.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "The Washington Post" <email@e.washingtonpost.com>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 11/24/2015 1:07:43 AM
Subject: The Daily 202: Obama takes a post-Paris beating in the polls

View The Daily 202 on the Web

PowerPost

The Daily 202

Morning intelligence for leaders

Share on Twitter Share on Facebook

Obama takes a post-Paris beating in the polls

President Obama pauses as he addresses the nation on the night of the Paris attacks. (AP Photo/Evan Vucci)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

BY JAMES HOHMANN

THE BIG IDEA:

— President Obama has fallen back into negative territory since the Paris attacks.

A slight majority approved of the job he was doing in our poll last month, but a new Washington Post/ABC News poll out this morning shows that his approval has slipped to 46 percent, with 50 percent disapproving.

The fall has been driven almost entirely by concerns about terrorism and refugees.

On how he's handled the Islamic State, 57 percent of Americans disapprove, with 46 percent of the electorate strongly disapproving.

The intensity of anti-Obama sentiment has also flared up. Forty percent "strongly disapprove" of the president, the highest mark since right after the midterm elections last year.

Approval of Obama's handling of the terrorism threat also fell to a new low of 40 percent in our survey, down seven points from January, per Post pollster Scott Clement . The share who "strongly disapprove" of Obama's work on terrorism jumped from 31 percent to 43 percent. The previous record was 35 percent.

— So far, Obama's losses have not hampered Hillary Clinton. His former Secretary of State still led all GOP challengers on the issue of terrorism in our survey. But his weakness explains why she's worked to take a harder line and increasingly distance herself on the question of dealing with ISIS over the past two weeks.

— Obama is meeting with French President Francois Hollande at the White House today. Their joint press conference is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. Hollande met with British Prime Minister David Cameron yesterday and goes later this week to see the leaders of Germany, Italy and Russia. Above all, a senior administration official tells Karen DeYoung that Obama hopes to discuss how to "take advantage of what is clearly a new sense of momentum and urgency coming on the heels" of a series of recent militant attacks, not only in Paris, but in "Mali, Beirut, Ankara and elsewhere," including last month's bombing of a Russian commercial airliner. "We are hoping that more countries that have been in the game in Iraq are going to get deeper in the game in Syria," said the official.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Britain's Prime Minister David Cameron, left, and France's President Francois Hollande at the Elysee Palace in Paris yesterday. (AP Photo/Michel Euler)

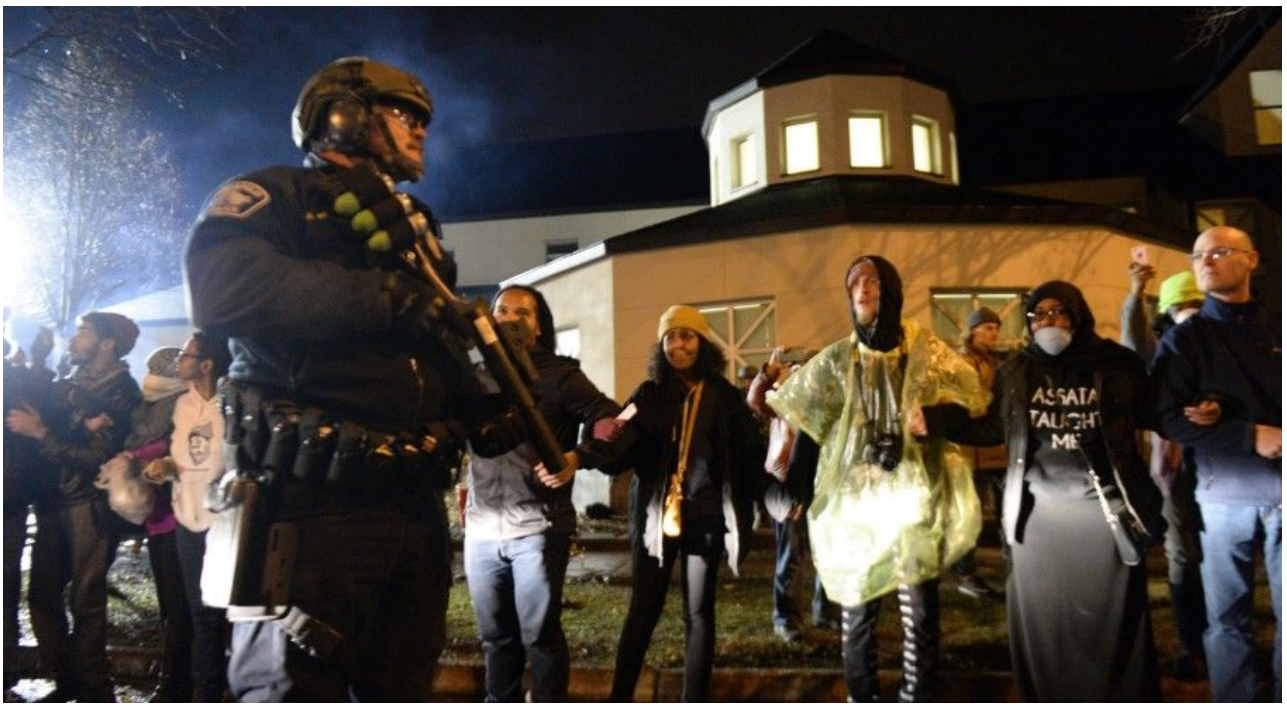
Welcome to The Daily 202, PowerPost 's morning newsletter. Sign up to receive the newsletter.

With contributions from Michael Smith .

WHILE YOU WERE SLEEPING:

— The State Department warned American citizens to exercise caution while traveling because of the threat of terrorism from ISIS, al-Qaeda and Boko Haram. The advisory extends until Feb. 24. One specific: Be careful when using transportation networks. (Martin Weil)

— Turkey said it shot down a Russian fighter jet after the plane violated Turkish airspace and didn't move after several warnings. Russia denies its aircraft crossed the Syrian border into Turkey.



This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

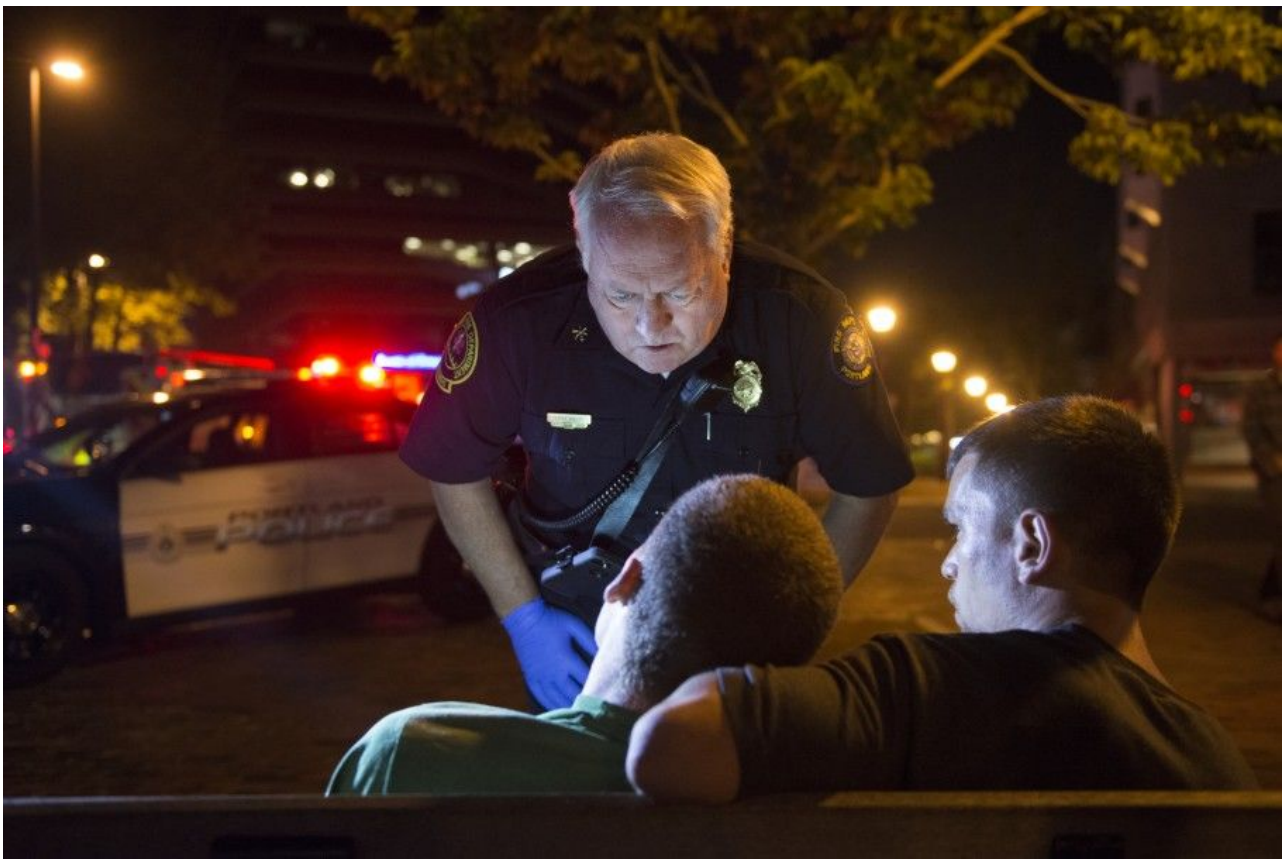
Iranian President Hassan Rouhani and Russian counterpart Vladimir Putin in Tehran (AFP/ Getty Images)

— Visiting Tehran, Vladimir Putin announced Russia will resume exporting nuclear technology to the Iranian regime. “Russia has also contracted to supply Iran with S-300 surface-to-air missile systems,” Andrew Roth reports from Moscow. “In a sign of the growing security partnership between the two countries, Iran has allowed Russian missiles and strategic bombers in the past month to fly through its airspace en route to Syria.” In his first visit to Iran since 2007, Putin met for more than 90 minutes with the country’s supreme leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei. In the meeting, Khamenei alleged a Western conspiracy that he says is dangerous to both Iran and Russia. “The Americans have a long-term plot and are trying to dominate Syria and then the whole region,” the ayatollah reportedly said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A Minneapolis police officer maintains a barricade outside the Minneapolis Police Department's Fourth Precinct last week. (John Autey/Pioneer Press via AP)

— White supremacists allegedly shot Black Lives Matter protesters in Minnesota. Five activists were shot near a police station in Minneapolis, the Star Tribune reports. The victims sustained non-life-threatening injuries. No arrests have yet been made, but police said they are searching for three white males.



Donald Trump speaks to a crowd of 14,000 during a rally at the Greater Columbus Convention Center last night. (Ty Wright/Getty Images)

— Trump says he doesn't care if waterboarding doesn't work. "Would I approve waterboarding? You bet your ass I would — in a heartbeat," Trump said to loud cheers during a rally in Columbus, Ohio. "And I would approve more than that. Don't kid yourself, folks. It works, okay? … Only a stupid person would say it doesn't work. … And you know what? If it doesn't work, they deserve it anyway, for what they're doing." He also reiterated his discredited and outrageous claim that he watched "fairly large numbers" of Muslims in New Jersey celebrating the 9/11 attacks, per Jenna Johnson . The Donald, meanwhile, told NBC that he has "the world's greatest memory."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ben Carson, meanwhile, walked back a claim that he saw footage showing thousands of Muslims in New Jersey celebrating the collapse of the Twin Towers following 9/11, releasing a statement hours after his initial remarks to clarify what his campaign called a mistaken reference. (Jose A. DelReal)

Portland, Maine, Deputy Fire Chief Terry Walsh responds to a possible heroin overdose by an 18-year-old male this summer. (Linda Davidson / The Washington Post)

— More data backs up what we're hearing from voters on the campaign trail. We are in the throes of a very real, very scary epidemic. Four in 10 Americans know someone who has been addicted to prescription painkillers, including 25 percent who say it was a close friend or family member and 2 percent who acknowledge their own addiction, according to a big Kaiser Family Foundation survey being released today. Lenny Bernstein got an early look :

- 16 percent say they know someone who has died from an overdose of prescription painkillers, including 9 percent who say that person was a family member or close friend.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- 56 percent of the public say they have some personal connection to the issue.
- Prescription painkiller abuse is most common among whites (63 percent) and the affluent (63 percent among people with incomes of $90,000 or more).

Chris Harper of the Patriots is tackled after catching a pass during the fourth quarter in Foxboro. (Maddie Meyer/Getty Images)

— The Patriots are 10-0 after beating the Buffalo Bills 20-13 on Monday Night Football. "But that came only after they lost two more pass-catchers, wide receivers Danny Amendola and Aaron Dobson, to injuries," notes Mark Maske .

A SCARY MOMENT:

- Four policemen were killed and 12 were injured after a car bomb exploded outside an Egyptian hotel where election officials were staying. (Reuters)
- Belgian police charged another suspect in connection with the Paris terror attacks, but the main suspect, Salah Abdeslam, is still on the loose and the city is still under lockdown. (Loveday Morris and Missy Ryan)
- A street cleaner in a suburb outside Paris found an explosive vest similar to those used in the attacks near the place where a suspect's mobile phone had been found, which raised the specter that he aborted his mission or fled in fear.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- A Palestinian motorist rammed his vehicle into a group of Israeli soldiers at a West Bank checkpoint overnight, wounding three, just as Secretary of State John Kerry landed in Tel Aviv for his first visit in more than a year. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu outlined plans yesterday for tough new security measures against Palestinians in the West Bank after two more of his citizens were killed in stabbing attacks in less than 24 hours. (Ruth Eglash in Jerusalem)
- Two Chinese men were indicted in Thailand for the August bombing that killed 20 people and injured more than 100 others in Bangkok. (AP)

GET SMART FAST:

1. The ACLU sued Indiana Gov. Mike Pence for barring Syrian refugees, arguing that it violates the Constitution and the Civil Rights Act, while Maryland Gov. Larry Hogan doubled down on his decision to not allow Syrian refugees into his state, despite John Kerry sending a letter of reassurance about the vetting process. (Josh Hicks)
2. Canada's new prime minister, Justin Trudeau, will announce his plan today to accept 25,000 Syrian refugees. Aides say all 10 provincial premiers are on board. (AP)
3. Macedonia began turning away migrants who can't prove they are leaving the war-torn countries of Syria, Afghanistan or Iraq. Other European countries are speeding up the deportation of thousands of Pakistani migrants to free up space for those with more urgent asylum requests. (Oscar Lopez and Tim Craig)
4. The Seventh Circuit struck down a Wisconsin law that requires abortion providers to get admitting privileges at nearby hospitals as unconstitutional, siding with Planned Parenthood. (AP)
5. The Second Circuit ruled that the Justice Department doesn't have to make public documents related to the targeted killings of al-Qaeda members. (New York Times)
6. The Texas student whose homemade clock was mistaken by school administrators as a bomb, Ahmed Mohamed, filed a $15 million lawsuit alleging that he was interrogated by seven police officers and pressured to confess. (Jessica Contrera)
7. Hawaii's Supreme Court blocked the construction of one of the world's biggest telescopes on a volcano because natives say it would damage sacred lands. (Reuters)
8. The University of Ottawa cancelled a yoga class after a student group complained that the exercise method was stolen from a culture that "experienced oppression, cultural genocide and diasporas due to colonialism and western supremacy." (Justin Wm. Moyer)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

9. The academic journal Science is rebuking claims by Rep. Lamar Smith (R-Texas) that its study outlining the dangers of global warming was rushed, with the publication insisting that its paper published by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration was subjected to a longer-than-normal review process. (Lisa Rein)
10. NASA is not ready to handle the dangers of deep space as it moves ahead with plans to send the first human mission to Mars by the 2030s, the agency's Inspector General concludes in a 48-page audit. (Jerry Markon)
11. Phobos, one of the two small moons orbiting Mars, is spiraling closer and closer to the Red Planet on its way toward an inevitable collision with its host. Cal Berkeley astronomers published a study suggesting that pieces of Phobos will get a second life as a ring around Mars at some point in the next 40 million years. (Los Angeles Times)

This is in the Acidalia Planitia region of Mars, as seen from NASA's Mars Reconnaissance Orbiter. In the novel and movie "The Martian," it is the landing site for the Ares 3 mission. (NASA/JPL-Caltech/Univ. of Arizona/Handout via Reuters)

POWER PLAYERS IN THE NEWS:

1. Rep. Mike Pompeo (R-Kan.) said that his own wife gave him an "F" for his questioning of Hillary Clinton during the Benghazi committee hearing and his son gave him a "C." (BuzzFeed)
2. Marco Rubio is going on TV in the early states with a 60-second biographical spot featuring his father. It takes a clip from his stump speech about his dad working late nights as a bartender so that he could realize the American Dream. (NBC)
3. In response to complaints about Donald Trump's gig hosting "Saturday Night Live,"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

NBC will grant equal air time to John Kasich, Mike Huckabee, Jim Gilmore and Lindsey Graham in its commercials and promotions over Thanksgiving weekend. (New York Times)

4. Trump and Clinton both came out strongly against the Pfizer-Allergan merger, with Clinton focusing on the tax inversion loophole the pharmaceutical giants are exploiting, while Trump argued (less plausibly) that it will lead to job losses for Americans. (More on the outcry .)
5. Carson called Terry Schiavo's brother but declined to apologize or meet with him. The neurosurgeon raised ire from social conservatives after he said that the political effort to save Schiavo's life was "much ado about nothing." (Daily Caller)
6. A former investigator for the Benghazi Committee sued panel chairman Trey Gowdy for wrongful termination and defamation, alleging that the South Carolina congressman fired him because he took leave for military duty and did not focus his investigation on Hillary Clinton. Gowdy strongly denies the accusations. (Elise Viebeck)
7. Rep. Mike Bishop (R-Mich.) endorsed Jeb Bush. (The Hill)
8. Chris Christie ordered his state's flags to fly at half-staff to honor a New Jersey native killed in the Mali hotel attack. (Asbury Park Press)
9. Sanders ate dinner with Killer Mike in Atlanta as part of his African-American outreach effort . The rapper posted this picture on Twitter :

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

WAPO HIGHLIGHTS:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Louise Sunshine, a powerful real estate developer who worked for Donald Trump for 15 years starting in the 70's and rose to Senior Vice President in Trump Enterprises, in her spacious Miami Beach penthouse. (Angel Valentin For The Washington Post)

— "Donald Trump, a champion of women? His female employees think so ," by Frances Stead Sellers: Louise Sunshine, a 15-year employee of The Donald's real estate business, recounts how Trump kept a "fat picture" of her in a drawer, pulling it out when she did something he didn't like ("totally false and totally ridiculous," Trump said). But Sunshine, who became executive vice president of the Trump Organization, doesn't begrudge her former boss, calling him a "valued mentor." Thus this paradox: Despite the businessman's sometimes misogynistic barbs on the campaign trail, "…many women who have worked closely with Trump say he was a corporate executive ahead of his time in providing career advancement for women. While some say he could be boorish, his companies nurtured and promoted women in an otherwise male-dominated industry. Several women said they appreciated how Trump granted them entry to a new playing field."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mizanur Rahman, an alleged ISIS recruiter, is awaiting trial in the UK, where he was born and raised. (Shannon Jensen/For The Washington Post)

— The latest in our series on "Confronting the Caliphate" –> "Police call him an ISIS recruiter. He says he's just an outspoken preacher," by Kevin Sullivan: "Mizanur Rahman sat in a coffee shop in Palmers Green, wearing a court-mandated electronic ankle bracelet beneath his long, black Muslim robe. British authorities consider him an Islamic State recruiter, so they closely monitor his movements and have taken his passport. He is banned from meeting with more than two people at a time and must spend his nights under curfew at his home in north London. Most difficult for Rahman, he is not allowed to touch any Internet-connected device. … Police believe the 32-year-old is a key figure in the world of preachers, teachers and true believers whose sophisticated online propaganda is critical to the Islamic State's allure. They says his thousands of tweets and Facebook posts, and fiery lectures on YouTube, are intended to inspire vulnerable young people — from London to Chicago to New Delhi — to join a militant group that beheads, crucifies, burns and drowns its enemies in the name of God."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Auburn spent $13.9 million on a new scoreboard for its stadium. Head coach Gus Malzahan is seen at a game last month. (Photo by Andy Lyons/Getty Images)

— "Playing in the red, " by Will Hobson and Steven Rich: "Big-time college sports departments are making more money than ever before, thanks to skyrocketing television contracts, endorsement and licensing deals, and big-spending donors. But many departments also are losing more money than ever, as athletic directors choose to outspend rising income to compete in an arms race that is costing many of the nation's largest publicly funded universities and students millions of dollars. … To examine why, The Post reviewed thousands of pages of financial records from 48 public universities in the five wealthiest collegiate conferences." Two remarkable stats:

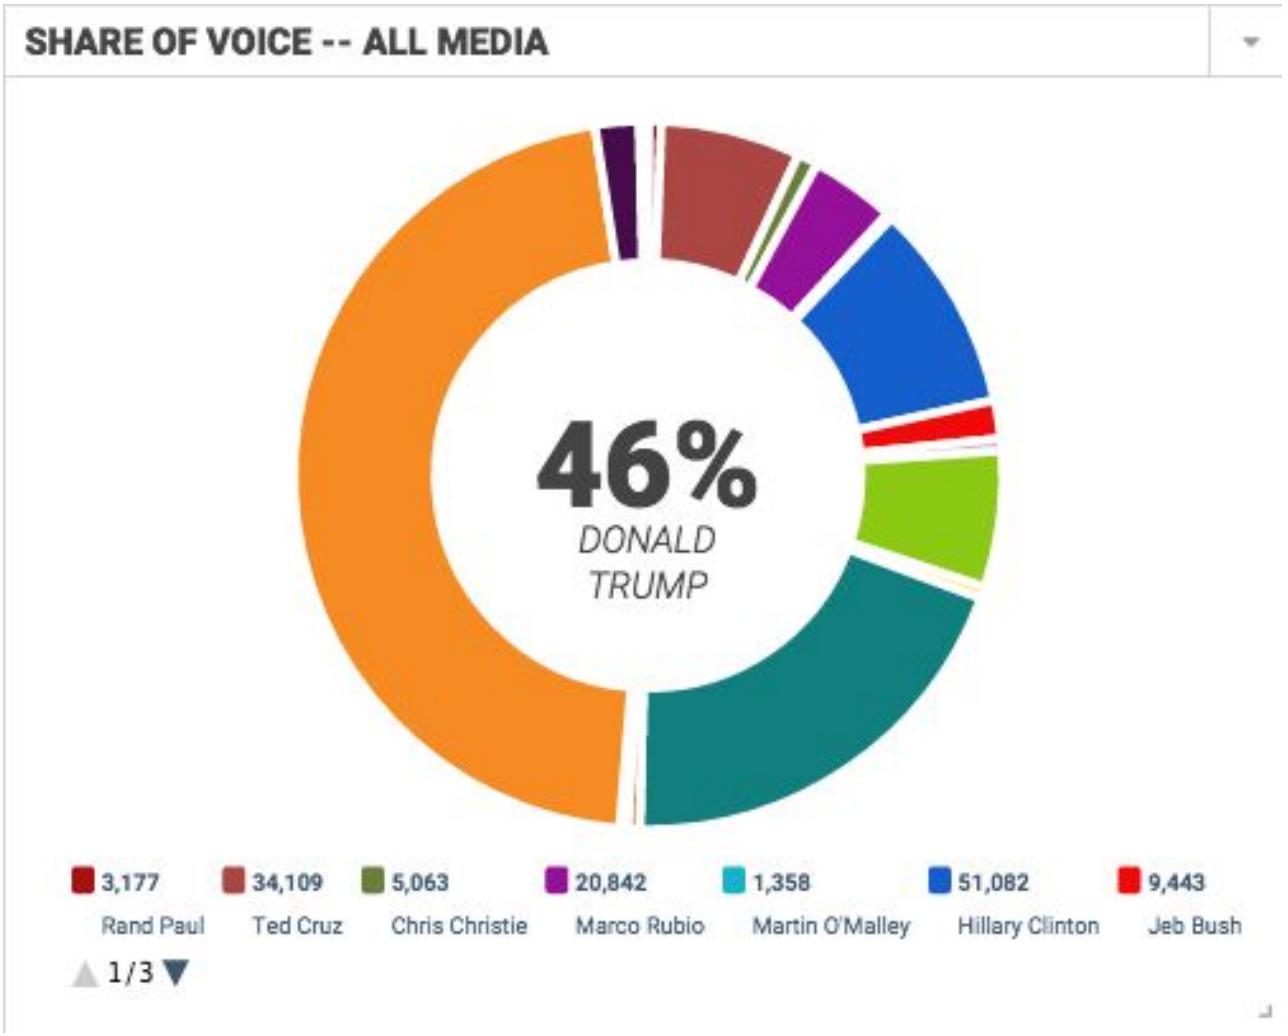
- From 2004 to 2014, the combined income of the 48 departments nearly doubled, from $2.67 billion to $4.49 billion. The median department saw earnings jump from $52.9 million to $93.1 million.
- While some athletic programs have eliminated or reduced mandatory student fees earmarked for sports, other programs are charging more than ever. Students paid $114 million in required athletics fees in 2014, up from $95 million in 2004."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Federal Reserve Chair Janet Yellen testifies before the House Finance Committee earlier this month. (Photo by Chip Somodevilla/Getty Images)

— "Ralph Nader told Fed Chair Janet Yellen to sit down with her economist husband. Now she's responded," by Ylan Q. Mui: "Nader issued an open letter to Yellen last month arguing that low interest rates were unjustly hurting savers. … Nader's letter was even more controversial for the personal sideswipe he took at Yellen, the first woman to lead the central bank in its 100-year history:

> Chairwoman Yellen, I think you should sit down with your Nobel Prize winning husband, economist George Akerlof, who is known to be consumer-sensitive. Together, figure out what to do for tens of millions of Americans who, with more interest income, could stimulate the economy by spending toward the necessities of life.



On Monday, Yellen did something unusual. She responded in a missive of her own. 'Thank you for your recent letter,' it began. But the tone quickly shifts: 'It may help to review a few basic facts.' … Yellen makes no mention of Nader's comment about her husband. But the letter is signed by just one person: Janet Yellen."

SOCIAL MEDIA SPEED READ:

— ZIGNAL VISUAL: Trump extends his dominance across social media. In what is typically a slow week for news because of the Thanksgiving holiday, Donald Trump has sucked up all of the media oxygen by questioning the patriotism of New Jersey Muslims. On Monday, 46 percent of all mentions related to 2016 were about Trump:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

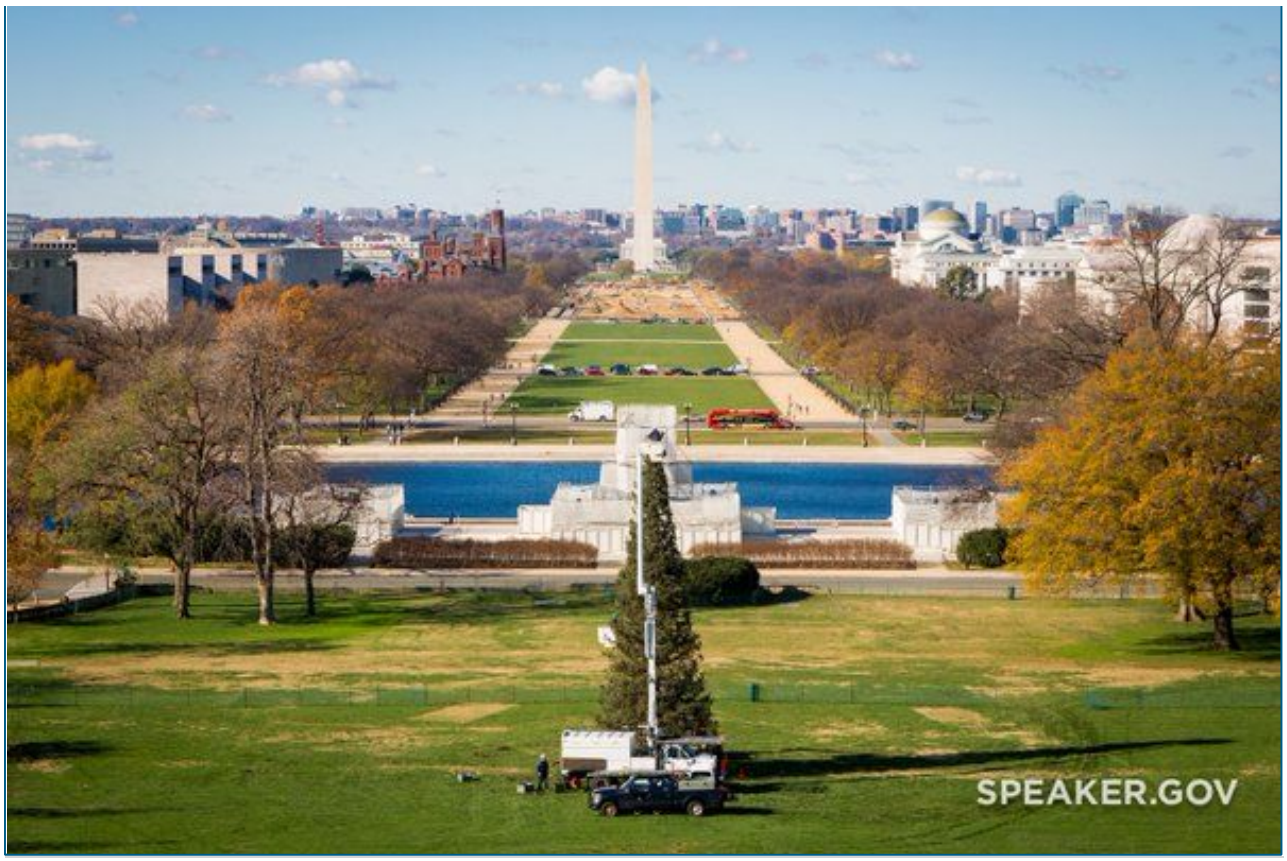
Here's Trump's word cloud for yesterday:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

–Pictures of the day:

The RNC unveiled its logo for next summer’s convention:



This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(Cleveland.com)

Speaker Paul Ryan posted a photo of this year's Capitol Christmas Tree from his balcony:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

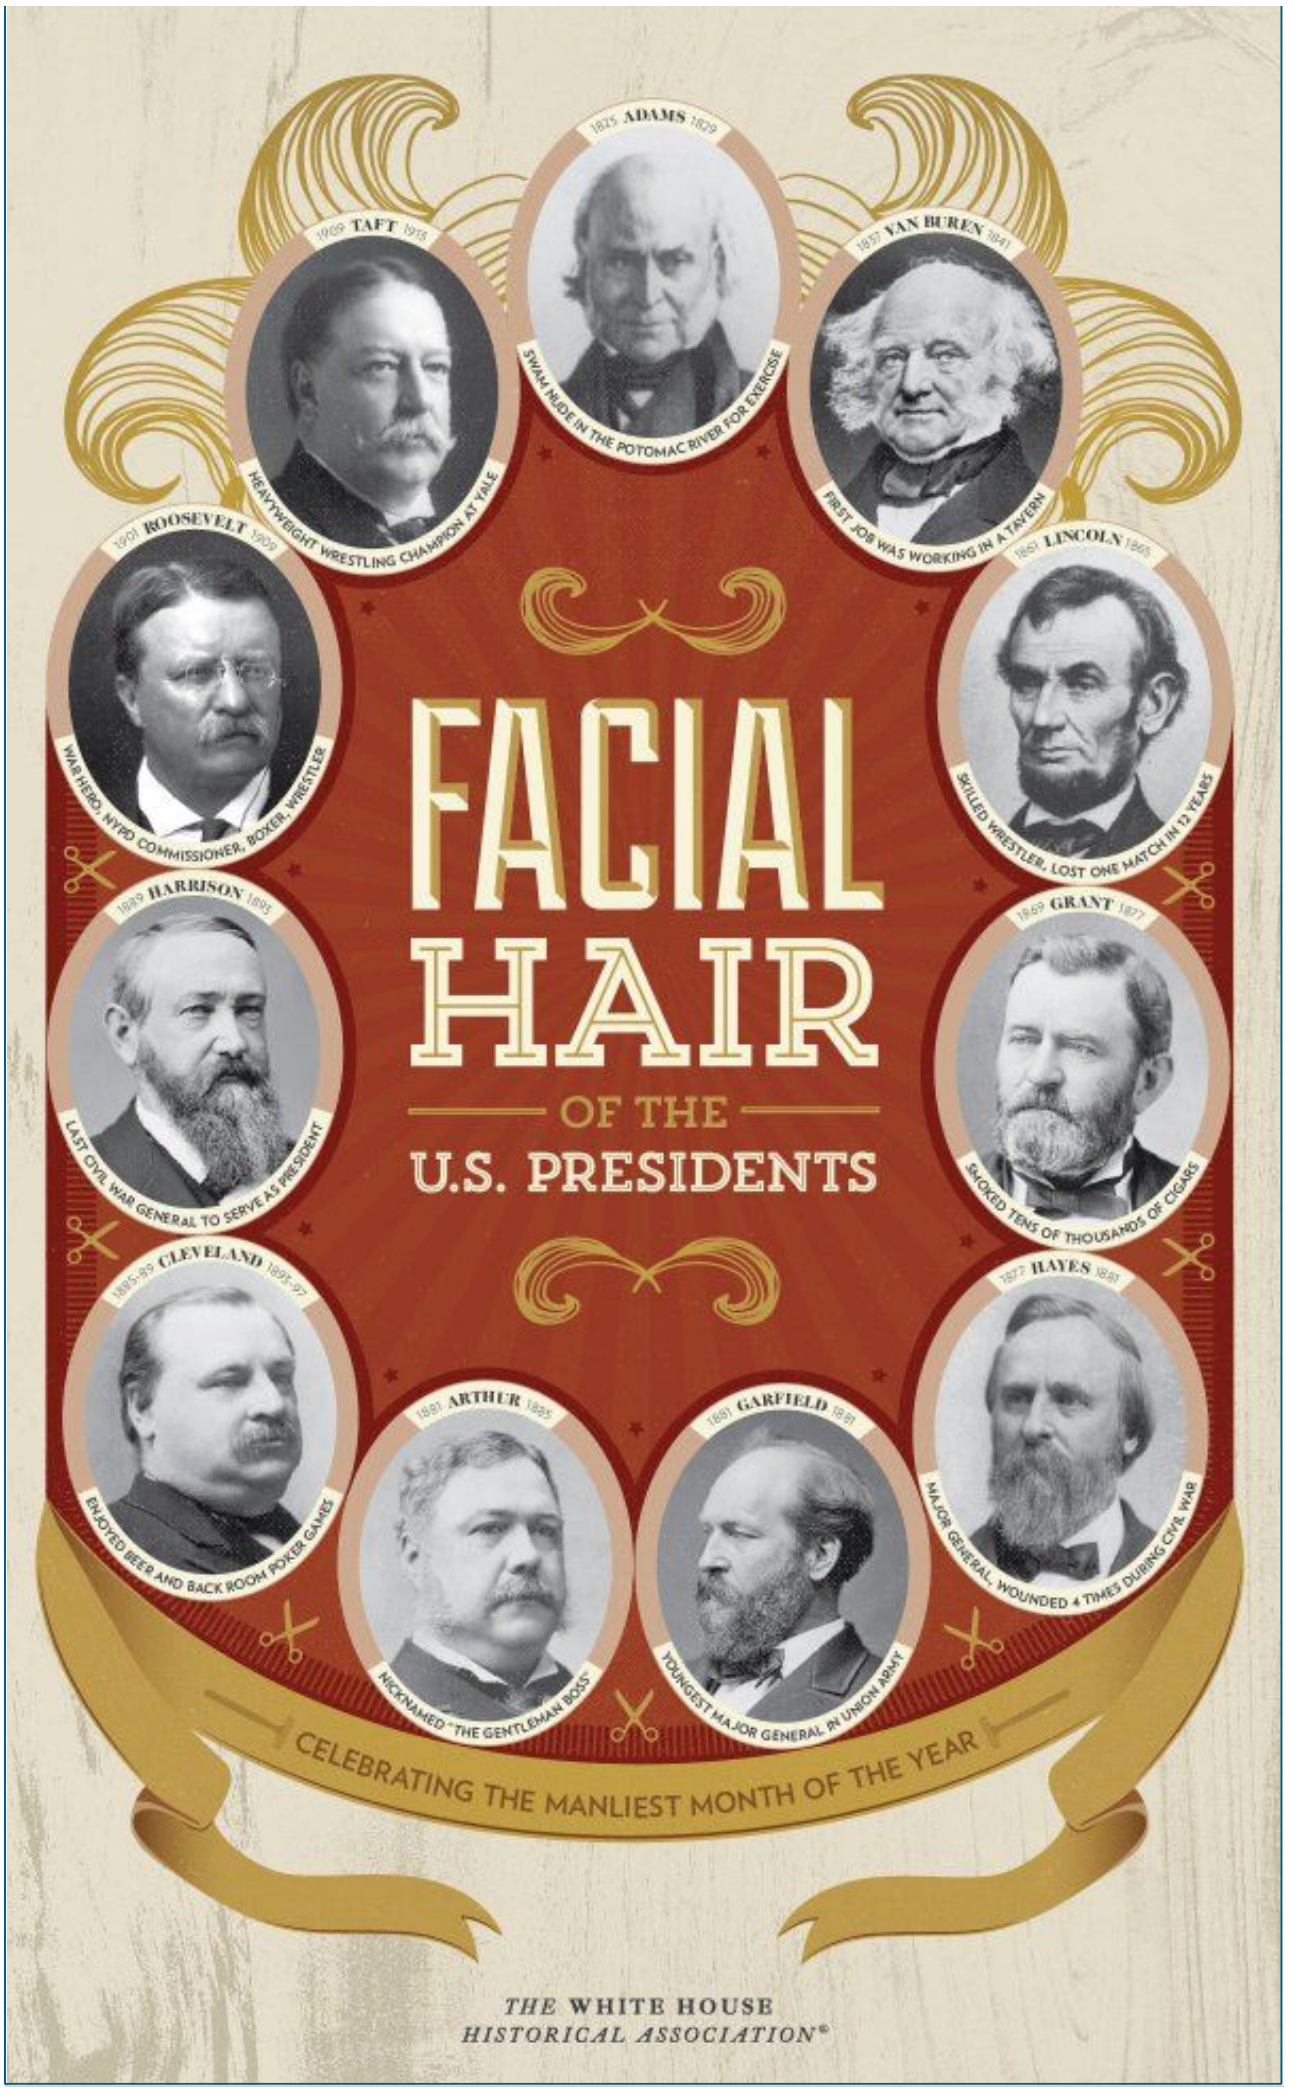
(@SpeakerRyan)

Bernie Sanders met with Rev. Bernice King at the King Center in Atlanta:

(@BernieSanders)

Iowa farmer Mike Pattavina plowed a quarter-acre “Bernie” sign in his soybean field:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.



Ben Carson greeted big crowds in Nevada:

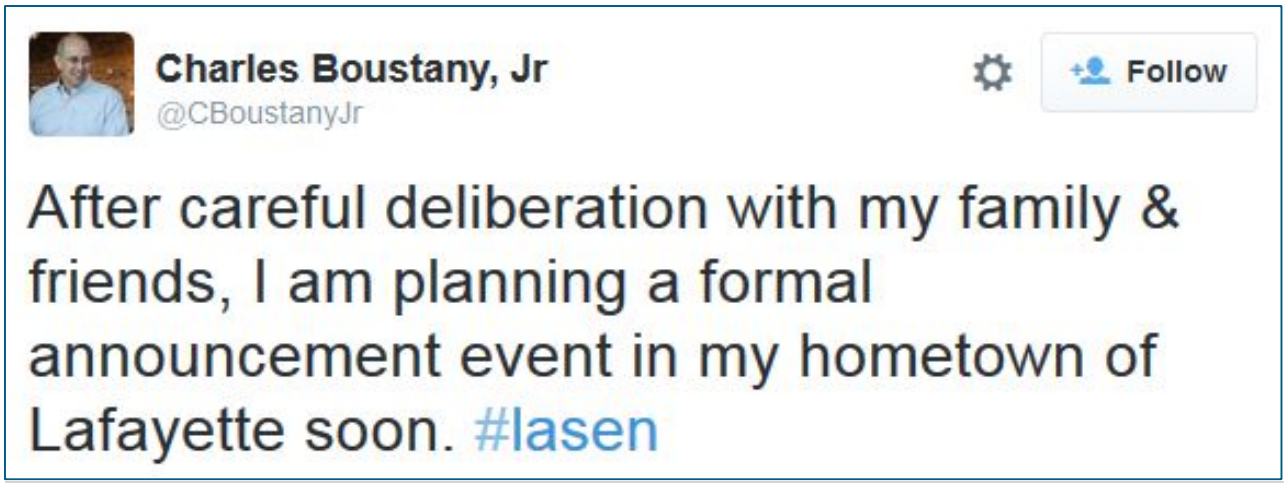
(realbencarson)

Check out the presidents who lived #NoShaveNovember all the time:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(@WhiteHouseHstry)



–Tweets of the day:

Donald Trump argued this passage from the Washington Post proves he was right about people cheering the 9/11 attacks in New Jersey:

(@realDonaldTrump)

Rep. Charles Boustany (R-La.) announced he'll run for David Vitter's seat:

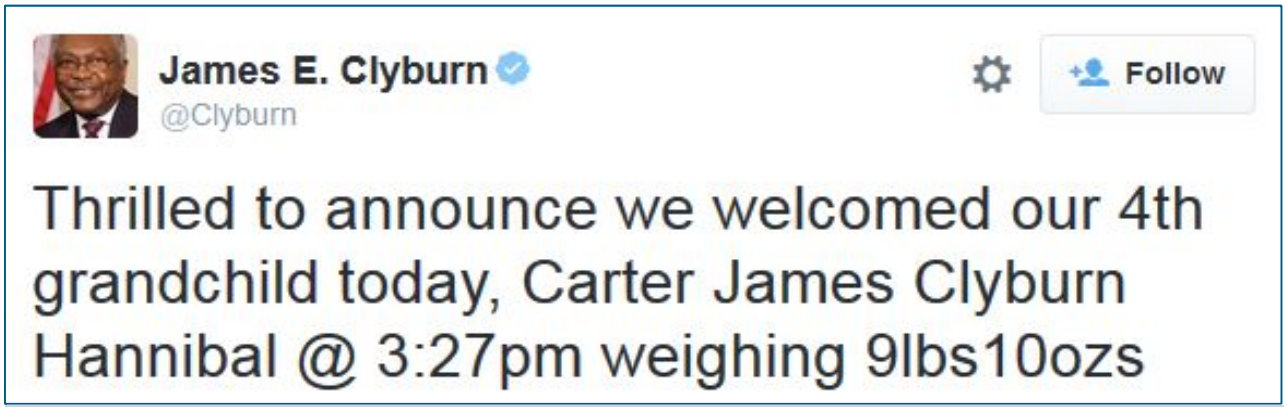
(@CBoustanyJr)

Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) invoked Thanksgiving to argue for admitting refugees from Syria:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(@SenatorDurbin)

Rep. Mark Meadows (R-N.C.) rang the holiday bell for the Salvation Army:



(@RepMarkMeadows)

Rep. James Clyburn (D-S.C.) announced the birth of his newest grandchild, Carter James

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clyburn Hannibal:

(@Clyburn)

–Instagrams of the day:

Marco Rubio braved the snow in Iowa to meet voters:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(marcorubiofla)

Sen. Tom Carper (D-Del.) chatted with Santa at an event to pack boxes to feed the hungry:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(senatorcarper)

Sen. Chuck Schumer (D-N.Y.) celebrated his 65th birthday on Monday:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(chuckschumer)

GOOD READS FROM ELSEWHERE:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mauricio Macri celebrates his victory on Sunday night next to his wife, Juliana Awada, and his daughter, Antonia, in Buenos Aires. (EPA/Silvina Frydlewsky)

A NEW PAGE FOR LATIN AMERICA?: Soccer fans are cheering the election of Mauricio Macri, a former president of the popular club Bocca Juniors. The son of a rich businessman, Macri — the former mayor of Buenos Aires — represents a sharp break with Latin America's populist leaders as a center-right politician who is expected to usher in better relations with the U.S. Macri's win "ends 12 years of 'Kirchnerismo,' a populist brand of leftist politics embodied by President Cristina Kirchner and her late husband, Néstor. Together, the pair nationalized industries, stripped the central bank of independence, and ramped up spending and subsidies. Those policies lifted incomes temporarily but hurt investment and stoked inflation." Macri, a Freddy Mercury fan and Ayn Rand devotee, is already taking a harder line on Venezuela, and the U.S. Chamber of Commerce has begun organizing its first visit to Argentina in a decade. Read post-election profiles in the Wall Street Journal , the New York Times and The Post .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Marco Rubio, in Miami in February, teaches political science at Florida International University. (Charles Ommanney for the Washington Post)

— Tampa Bay Times, "Marco Rubio drew strong student reviews, but skimped on job requirements as FIU professor," by Adam C. Smith: "Even after he became a U.S. senator and started traveling the country as a national GOP star and prospective presidential candidate, Rubio continued teaching Mondays and Fridays at FIU until April, earning $23,448 last year in addition to his $174,000 salary as a U.S. senator. …Students and teaching colleagues raved about Rubio's work in the classroom and the excitement of having a prominent Florida politician, and later a sitting U.S. senator and prospective presidential candidate, teaching them. Yet, despite consistently strong student evaluations for Rubio, records obtained by the Times indicate he was expected to do considerably more work than he actually performed. 'The requirements of this position include, but are not limited to the following: prepare and present lectures, develop reading lists, assign and grade homework, prepare, give and grade tests, meet with students, and provide grades to students in accordance with the academic standards of Florida International University,' stated letters signed by Rubio and his supervisors in 2011, 2013, 2014 and 2015. But Rubio never developed reading lists or graded papers or tests, according his colleagues."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Chris Christie in Stratham, N.H., on Saturday. (Erik Hawkins/Portsmouth Herald via AP)

— New York Times, "After Paris, voters give Chris Christie a second look, " by Michael Barbaro: "It is too early to tell how the Paris attacks will ultimately reshape the topsy-turvy Republican presidential race. But this much is clear: It has brought sudden intensity, attention and focus to the once-moribund candidacy of Christie. Across New Hampshire, voters are reassessing the man they had all but written off six months ago and whose political standing is still precarious. But for the first time, a solid majority of Republican voters in the state have a favorable view of the governor, according to two polls, a remarkable turnaround from the depths of his unpopularity. And many of those giving Christie a second look are bluntly pointing to the same reason for the change of heart: terrorism. In the days after gunmen rampaged across the French capital, Mark Burns, a 61-year-old businessman from Manchester, surveyed the Republican field for a candidate whose forcefulness matched this scary moment. To his surprise, it was Christie. 'We are going to war,' said Burns, who called Christie man enough to lead the battle. 'He's the only one.'"

— Politico, "Republicans seek to strangle Paris climate pact ," by Darren Goode and Andrew Restuccia: "Call it the climate cliff. On Dec. 11, Obama administration diplomats will be in Paris working to clinch a global climate deal that will hinge on whether they can back up a pledge to provide billions of dollars to help poor countries deal with climate change. That same day, Republicans back in Washington will be trying to hold that money hostage with a government shutdown hanging in the balance. … Congress must pass a new spending bill by Dec. 11, when a stopgap measure expires. The simultaneous deadlines on each side of the Atlantic Ocean give Republicans a tool to derail a legacy-defining pact for the president and score a rare victory on climate policy. They also significantly raise the stakes in this year's game of shutdown chicken."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

HOT ON THE LEFT

Climate change worsens terrorism. From the Huffington Post: "Environmental leaders argue that attendees of Paris climate talks have a chance to kill two birds with one stone: mitigate global warming and terrorism. A paper published in March … concluded that global warming contributed to Syria's conflict by exacerbating the country's drought, which began in 2006. The lack of rainfall worsened the country's already unstable water and agricultural resources, forcing 1.5 million rural inhabitants to move closer to urban centers."

HOT ON THE RIGHT

Electric cars' dirty secret: All the coal needed to run them. From The Post's Michael Birnbaum in Rotterdam: "Thanks to generous tax incentives, the share of electric vehicles has grown faster in the Netherlands than in nearly any other country in the world. But behind the green growth is a filthy secret: In a nation famous for its windmills, electricity is coming from a far dirtier source. Three new coal-fired power plants, including two here on the Rotterdam harbor, are supplying much of the power to fuel the Netherlands' electric-car boom. As the world tries to reduce greenhouse-gas emissions and combat climate change, policymakers have pinned hopes on electric cars, whose range and convenience are quickly improving. Alongside the boom has come a surging demand for power to charge the vehicles, which can consume as much electricity in a single charge as the average refrigerator does in a month and a half."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

DAYBOOK:

— What's happening today on the campaign trail: Hillary Clinton attends events in Boulder and Denver, Colo. In S.C., Donald Trump holds an evening rally in Myrtle Beach and Jeb Bush stops in Greenville, Spartanburg and Rock Hill. Chris Christie speaks at the Council on Foreign Relations in D.C. Marco Rubio stops in Cedar Rapids, Grinnell and Des Moines, Iowa, and Lindsey Graham is in Manchester, N.H. Rand Paul speaks in Hazard, Ky.

— On the Hill: The Senate and House are in recess.

— At the White House: President Obama holds a bilateral meeting and a joint press conference with French President Francois Hollande. Later, Obama awards the Presidential Medal of Freedom. Juliet Eilperin explains how the selection process works here .

QUOTE OF THE DAY: "Donald Trump is paying attention to me for reasons that are completely beyond me," Karl Rove told USA Today . "He's got a limited amount of time that even he can fill. Why does he waste his early-morning hours tweeting out that I'm a total loser and a moron? It's also funny because in person he's entirely different. A week ago Monday, I was at Fox. He's there advertising his book. He comes in and he's his jovial self and we shake hands. … He starts gesticulating toward me. 'I want this guy' — pointing to me — 'in my corner. I want him on my side.' I said, 'No, you don't. You call me a loser and say we spent $480 million and didn't win a single election. Who do you think you're kidding? No, you don't.' And we laughed and had a cordial conversation and wished each other well and off we went."

NEWS YOU CAN USE IF YOU LIVE IN D.C.:

— "Mostly sunny skies, but still a chilled morning as temperatures lift from the 20s and low 30s to the 40s in the morning and then near 50 by mid-afternoon," the Capital Weather Gang forecasts . "Light breezes from the west at 5 to 10 mph won't offer as much wind chill as yesterday, so the air will have a little less of a bite to it."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

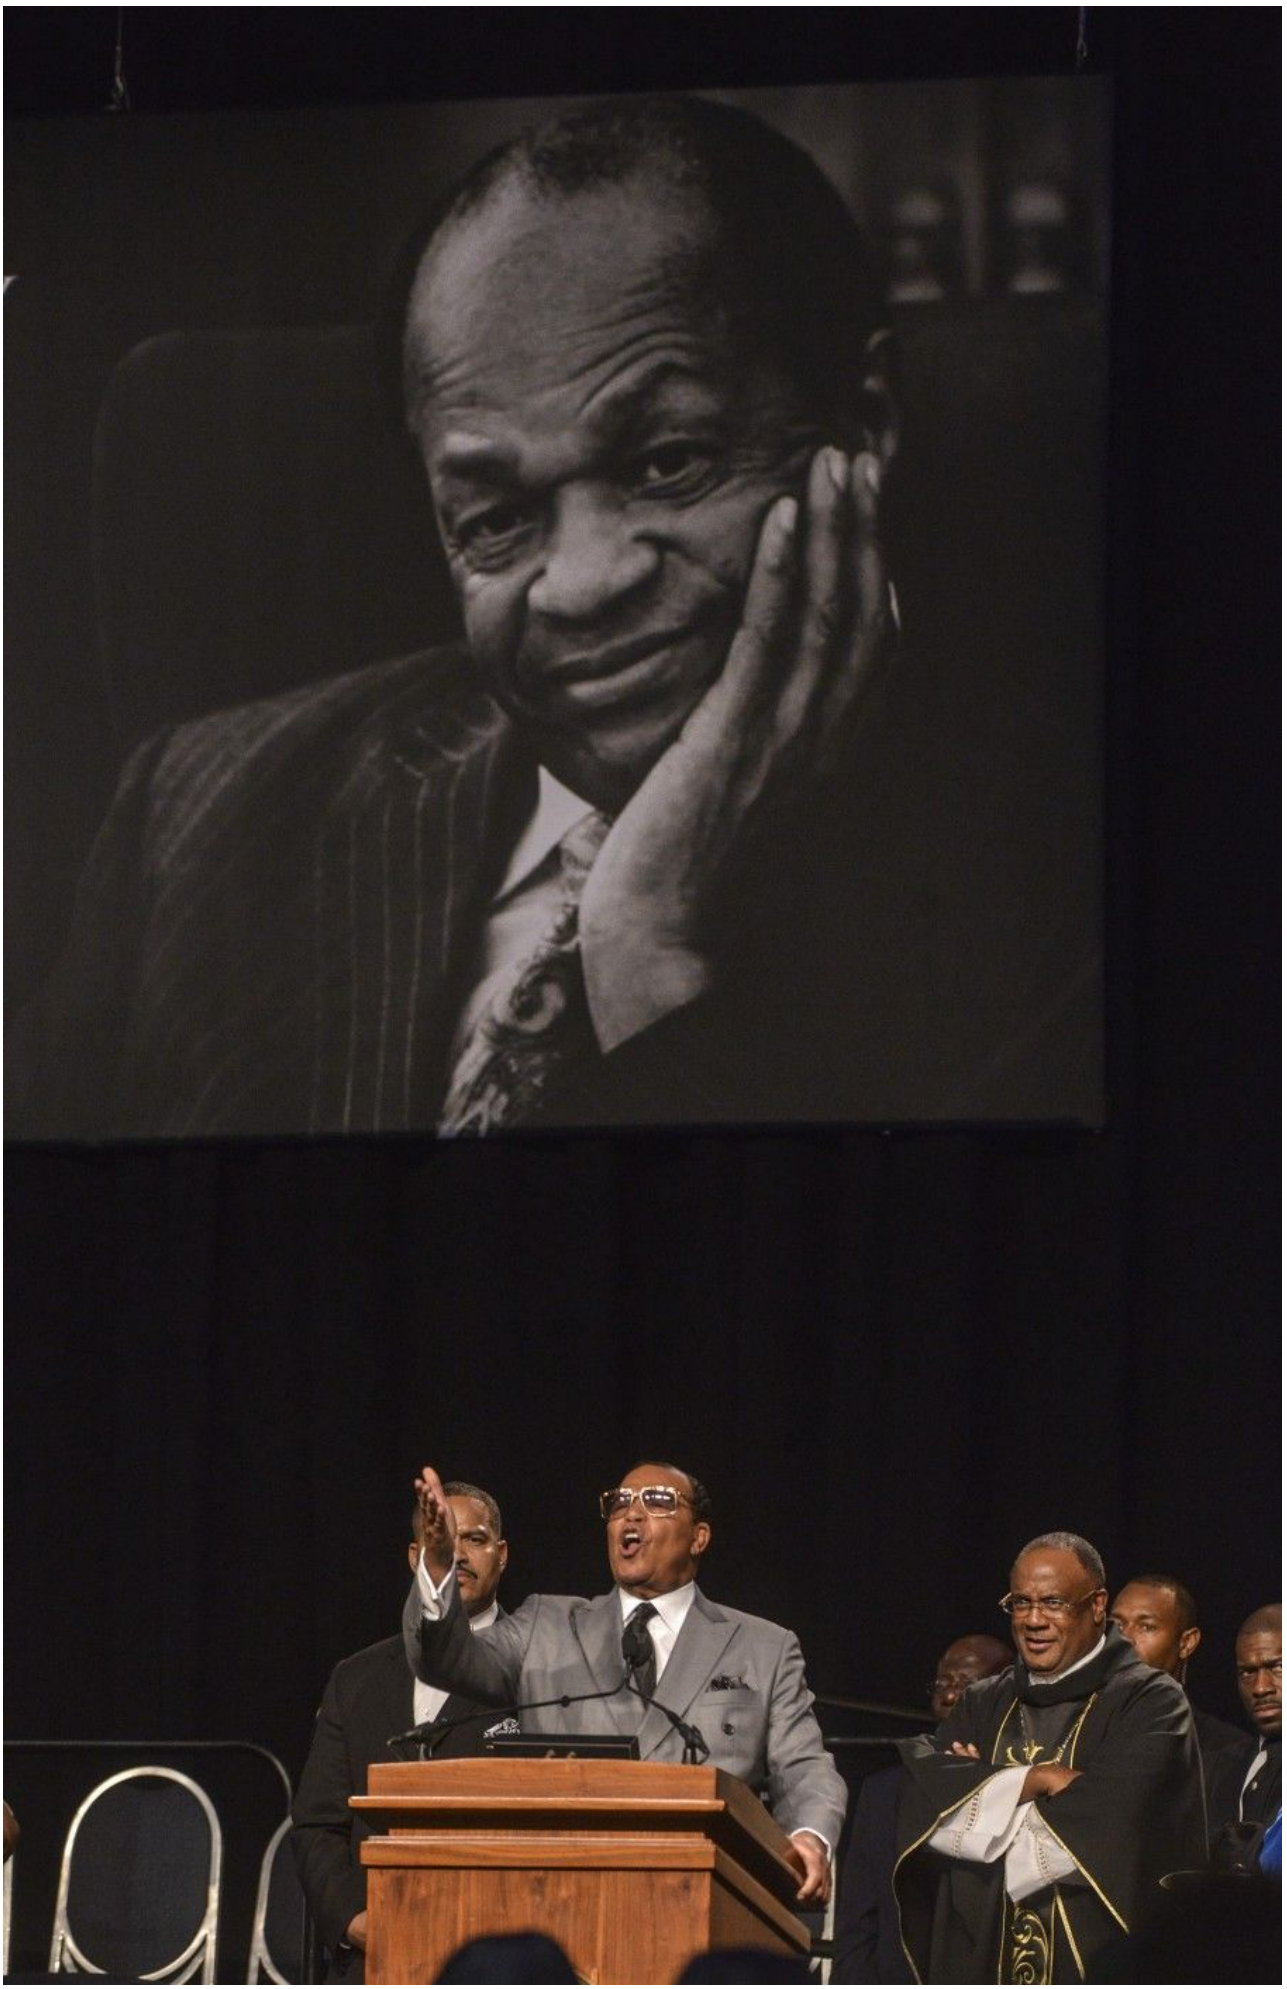
— The Post created a getaway guide for folks trying to escape the D.C. area for Thanksgiving. The worst time to get on the road? Tuesday from 5 to 6 p.m. See maps and other pointers here .

Goalie Braden Holtby #70 of the Capitals makes a save on Eric Gryba of the Oilers during the third period at the Verizon Center last night. (Patrick Smith/Getty Images)

— The Capitals shut out the Edmonton Oilers 1-0 for their third win in four games. (Isabelle Khurshudyan)



This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Matt Damon as Jason Bourne in 2007's "Bourne Ultimatum." (AP Photo/Universal Pictures, Jasin Boland, file)

— The next installment of the Bourne franchise is filming in the District from Dec. 2 through Dec. 5 and then on Dec. 7. That means you have five days to spot Matt Damon as Jason Bourne. (Helena Andrews-Dyer)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Louis Farrakhan speaks at a funeral service for Marion Barry last December. (Bill O'Leary/ The Washington Post)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

— On the anniversary of his death, a commission recommended four ways that the D.C. government could honor former Mayor Marion S. Barry Jr.: renaming Good Hope Road SE; commissioning a bust or statue in front of city hall; renaming Frank W. Ballou Senior High School; and naming the student center at the University of the District of Columbia.

D.C. Police Chief Cathy L. Lanier (Marvin Joseph/The Washington Post)

— D.C.'s police chief says sometimes rushing the gunman might be the best option in active shooter situations. Cathy L. Lanier says it might save lives not to wait for cops to arrive. She cited the Navy Yard shootings in 2013. "Your options are run, hide or fight," Lanier said. "I always say if you can get out, getting out's your first option, your best option. If you're in a position to try and take the gunman down, to take the gunman out, it's the best option for saving lives before police can get there." (Peter Hermann)

VIDEOS OF THE DAY:

— Trump attacked Clinton on Instagram with a video interspersing clips of the Democratic frontrunner laughing with images of the Benghazi attack. "Don't let the joke be on us" is the tagline. The pro-John Kasich super PAC released a minute-long web video with clips of Trump's biggest gaffes this year. (Elise Viebeck)

— Seth Meyers mocked Trump, Sanders and Christie in his "jokes of the week" segment:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(Late Night with Seth Meyers)"

— Chris Soules, a former contestant on ABC's "The Bachelor," recorded a TV ad promoting ethanol that will run in Iowa this week:

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

(Growth Energy)

— SNL showed famous actors failing their “Star Wars” audition tests. Watch the four-minute skit here .

— To end on a lighter note: U2 will make up its postponed Paris concerts next month. “So much that was taken from Paris on the tragic night of November 13th is irreplaceable,” U2’s Bono said in a statement. “For one night, the killers took lives, took music, took peace of mind – but they couldn’t steal the spirit of that city.”

You are receiving this e-mail because you signed up for the The Daily 202 newsletter or were registered on washingtonpost.com or were invited as a VIP. For additional free newsletters or to manage your newsletters, click here .

We respect your privacy . If you believe that this e-mail has been sent to you in error, or you no longer wish to receive e-mail from The Washington Post, click here . Contact us for help.

©2015 The Washington Post | 1150 15th St NW, Washington, DC 20071

The Washington Post

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To:	"Jennifer Palmieri" <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com>
Date:	3/21/2015 1:34:37 PM
Subject:	Re: SCHWEIZER / Clinton Cash

Feels like what Brock is good at.

JP
--Sent from my iPad--
john.podesta@gmail.com
For scheduling: eryn.sepp@gmail.com

> On Mar 21, 2015, at 6:43 PM, Jennifer Palmieri <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com> wrote:
>
> That would be big - we are having a hard time finding it.
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
>> On Mar 21, 2015, at 6:36 PM, Margolis, Jim <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com> wrote:
>>
>> May have a line on it
>>
>>> On 3/21/15, 3:01 PM, "Robby Mook" <robbymook2015@gmail.com> wrote:
>>>
>>> Adding Kristina who is poking around as well
>>>
>>>
>>>
>>>> On Mar 21, 2015, at 5:54 PM, Margolis, Jim <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com> >>>> wrote:
>>>>
>>>> Definitely would be good to get a copyŠ
>>>>
>>>>
>>>> <Clinton Cash - Annoucement Release.doc>
>>

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 1/22/2015 1:48:14 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Thursday January 22, 2015 Morning Roundup

Correct The Record Thursday January 22, 2015 Morning Roundup:

Headlines:

CNN: “Clinton emerges from hiatus with updated vision for future”

“Hillary Clinton emerged from a month-long speaking tour hiatus on Wednesday with a host of new potential stump speech lines that could soon become the cornerstone of her all-but-certain presidential run.”

New York Times: First Draft: “Hillary Clinton Gives Her Own ‘State of the Union’”

“In her first speech of the year, at a luncheon hosted by a bank in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Mrs. Clinton took the opportunity to opine on several topics that could play a part in a 2016 presidential campaign.”

MSNBC: “Hillary Clinton backs Obama on foreign and domestic fronts”

“In her first public appearance in more than a month, Hillary Clinton strongly backed President Obama on both domestic and foreign policy, while saying western democracies like the U.S. and Canada are in an epic ‘contest’ with Islamic extremists and authoritarians.”

Associated Press: “Hillary Clinton declines to take position on Keystone”

“Hillary Rodham Clinton on Wednesday declined again to take a position on the Keystone XL pipeline, telling an audience in Canada that she would not express her views because of an ongoing review by the State Department.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CBC News: “Hillary Clinton speaks in Saskatoon”

“Clinton focused most of her formal address on the topic of Islamic extremism -- and how the U.S. and Canada should respond.”

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: “Hillary: Obama proposals 'an important start' on income inequality”

“Hillary Clinton backed President Obama's broad approach on a range of economic issues while leaving room for some disagreement during an appearance in Canada on Wednesday.”

Articles:

CNN: “Clinton emerges from hiatus with updated vision for future”

By Dan Merica

January 21, 2015

Winnipeg, Manitoba (CNN)Hillary Clinton emerged from a month-long speaking tour hiatus on Wednesday with a host of new potential stump speech lines that could soon become the cornerstone of her all-but-certain presidential run.

The former secretary of state and prohibitive favorite for Democrats' 2016 presidential nomination laid out a vision for the future during the prepared portion of her remarks in Winnipeg, Manitoba, highlighting the need to combat radicalism, increase stagnating wages and reform the United States' immigration system.

"For our democracies to meet the tests ahead, all of our people, not just those of us here, but all of our people, have to believe they too have a stake in our prosperity and our future, no matter where they are from, what they look like, who they worship or who they love," Clinton said.

Wednesday's speech in Winnipeg was Clinton's first headline appearance since Dec. 15. The dearth in events is noticeable considering Clinton's prevalence last year.

But the former secretary of state has been busy, according to a Democratic source who told CNN Clinton has been meeting with advisers for the last month at her Chappaqua, New York, home for strategy sessions about launching a 2016 presidential run.

The new lines focused heavily on empowering middle-class Americans and used Clinton's time as secretary of state to convey an understanding of the issue.

"We have to show the world that free people and free markets, human rights and human dignity, respect for our fellow men and women, is our core strength," Clinton said when speaking of the Paris terrorist attacks earlier this year. "We can't give in to division or distraction."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

People, no matter what society they are in all want mostly the same thing, Clinton said.

"Overwhelmingly they say, 'I want a good job. I want my children to get an education. I want my family to be safe and feel that they have a good future.' That is not so different than from what we want in the United States and Canada," she said.

Referring to the recent Paris terrorist attacks that gripped France and its allies, Clinton said the incidents "were stark reminders of the threats we face together," and "sharpened the true contours" of the fight against radicalism.

"Islam itself is not the adversary and the vast majority of Muslims are peaceful and tolerant people," Clinton said, before endorsing more controls on how extremists use the Internet to recruit.

Clinton also offered fresh comments on immigration, another hot-button issue.

"Canada and the United States, unlike most places in the world, are nations built by immigrants and energized by our diversity," Clinton said. "It hasn't always been smooth or easy, but at our best, we kept expanding our idea of family and community ... to keep making more room at the table."

In the past, Clinton has backed the Obama administration's plan to issue an executive action to overhaul the nation's immigration system, but not addressed the issue as core to continuing growth.

Though she has at times distanced herself from Obama -- her former boss and rival -- on a number of issues, in Canada, Clinton embraced many of the President's efforts.

"I think the President has been very successful," Clinton said, reflecting on Obama's sixth State of the Union address on Tuesday. "I think the President did a really good job in laying out some broad areas."

In unveiling these new lines, Clinton also hugged closely to the vision for the future that Obama laid out on Tuesday night.

Clinton said, Obama "offered a vision for helping the middle class in the United States reclaim its seat at the table. And the proposals he offered are an important start for a critical debate."

"I think we are certainly coming out of the worst of our problems," Clinton said reflecting on the Obama years. "I don't think the President gets the credit he and his team deserve for the way they navigated through the difficult area."

The former New York senator also dissuaded Democrats in the Senate from pushing new unilateral sanctions on Iran while negotiations with the country were still ongoing.

"I take the position that I think the President articulated last night," Clinton said, arguing that the sanctions would threaten the negotiations and be a "very serious, strategic error."

Once again, Clinton declined to offer an opinion about the building of the Keystone XL pipeline, a controversial proposal currently under review by the State Department and the subject of a power struggle between the Obama administration and the Republican-led Congress.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Before the event, some of the 2,000 people who paid $300 a ticket to attend Clinton's speech chatted about the former first lady's likely presidential run and the fact she was getting paid for Wednesday's appearance. Some even asked, "Do you think Clinton will declare her candidacy today?"

They were left disappointed, though. Clinton was not asked about her 2016 plans during a moderated discussion with CIBC CEO Victor Dodig and made no mention of them in her prepared remarks.

Clinton now heads to Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, for a similar event on Wednesday night.

New York Times: First Draft: “Hillary Clinton Gives Her Own ‘State of the Union’”

By Amy Chozick

January 21, 2015, 6:21 p.m. EST

Hillary Rodham Clinton on Wednesday denounced the recent attacks by Muslim extremists in Paris, weighed in on the proposals President Obama outlined in his State of the Union address and talked about how the United States could alleviate income inequality. She even impersonated President Vladimir V. Putin of Russia.

In her first speech of the year, at a luncheon hosted by a bank in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Mrs. Clinton took the opportunity to opine on several topics that could play a part in a 2016 presidential campaign.

But Mrs. Clinton is not a candidate yet, and therefore managed to remain mum on the one topic many in the audience had hoped to hear her talk about.

“You won’t get me to talk about Keystone, because I have steadily made clear I’m not going to express an opinion,” Mrs. Clinton said when asked about the contentious pipeline that would carry crude oil from Canada to refineries in the United States..

Mrs. Clinton did talk extensively about fighting Muslim extremism after 17 people were killed in terror attacks in Paris this month.

“The slaughter of satire writers and Jews and police officers sharpened the true contours of this struggle,” Mrs. Clinton said. “There is a distorted and dangerous strain of extremism within the Muslim world that continues to spread.”

She talked about growing income inequity in the United States and endorsed Mr. Obama’s proposal to make community college free. But Mrs. Clinton added that State of the Union addresses were about laying out an agenda and not necessarily enacting legislation. “I think there was plenty for people to work with in the president’s speech last night,” she said.

When asked how would she handle a Republican-led Congress if she were president, Mrs. Clinton responded that, as a “hypothetical,” she believed lawmaking was a “business transaction” and that “the art of compromise in our politics” was lacking.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At one point, Mrs. Clinton was asked what she would do “if she decided” to be president. She said that there was a process and then imitated Mr. Putin anointing himself president. “Excellent, excellent idea,” Mrs. Clinton said, feigning a Russian accent.

MSNBC: “Hillary Clinton backs Obama on foreign and domestic fronts”

By Alex Seitz-Wald

January 21, 2015, 5:09 p.m. EST

In her first public appearance in more than a month, Hillary Clinton strongly backed President Obama on both domestic and foreign policy, while saying western democracies like the U.S. and Canada are in an epic “contest” with Islamic extremists and authoritarians.

Clinton spoke to more than 2,000 in Winnipeg, Canada, at a lecture series sponsored by a Canadian bank. She was not asked whether she plans to run for president in 2016, and dodged questions on the Keystone XL pipeline, a thorn in the side of U.S.-Canada relations.

“You won’t get me to talk about Keystone because I have steadily made clear that I will not express an opinion,” she said while being questioned by Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce CEO Victor Dodig during the Q&A portion of her appearance. The former secretary of state has said she will not weigh in on the controversial pipeline until the Obama administration’s review of the project is complete.

But the likely presidential candidate had plenty of other things to say on a range of other topics.

Iran: Clinton gave a full-throated endorsement of President Obama’s approach to Iran and its nuclear program, rebuffing Republicans and Democrats in Congress who are trying to impose new sanctions on the country. She said the new sanctions, pushed by a bipartisan group of lawmakers friendly to Israel, could lead to “a very serious strategic error.”

They would give Russia and China “an excuse” to drop out of multilateral negotiations or push for a weaker deal with Iran, she said. “Why do we want to be the catalyst for the collapse of negotiations?”

“I feel very strongly about this,” she continued. “If we get to the point where [the Iranians] cheat … all bets are off. But right now, the status quo that we’re in is, in my view, in our interests, so I don’t want to do anything that disrupts that status quo.”

The sanctions are going to be major flashpoint for Obama with his own party this year, so the backing of the party’s likely future leader could be a major asset. “This should help stiffen the backbone of Democrats who were already reluctant to support new sanctions. Hopefully, unified Democratic opposition to sanctions will convince its sponsors to stop their dangerous push,” said Stephen Miles, the advocacy director of a group of 40 anti-war groups called the Win Without War Coalition.

Paris attacks: In her first public remarks on the matter, Clinton said recent terror attacks in Paris and elsewhere have “sharpened the true contours of this struggle” between Western democracy and Islamic extremists. “Islam itself is not the enemy,” she said, but rather a “vicious few” who promote an “ideology of hate.”

“Like previous ideological struggles, this is a generational challenge and it must be waged on many fronts,” she said, calling for an attack on extremist propaganda.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton drew a wide rhetorical circle around democratic countries and presented them as at war with terrorists and dictators alike. “Extremism, authoritarianism, Putinism – none of them can compete with democracy at our best,” she said.

Inequality: Clinton connected the fight against extremism abroad to the fight for justice at home. “Standing up for our own values in our communities is just as crucial as promoting them abroad,” she said. That includes “demagogues who pray on fears of immigrants” as well inequalities in the economy.

She continued her stepped-up embrace of economic populism, promoted perhaps most vocally in Democratic politics by Sen. Elizabeth Warren. Citing a recent Oxfam report that warned the top 1% will control half of the world’s wealth by 2016, Clinton said that kind of inequality is a threat to “the core” of Democracy and must be dealt with to expand the “circle of opportunity” to everyone. “Here in Canada, for example, you’ve shown that the economic inequality that we see in the United States and in many countries is not inevitable,” Clinton said. “You’ve invested in your middle class and it’s made a real difference.”

State of the Union: Clinton called President Obama’s State of the Union address “an important start for a critical debate” on expanding economic opportunity, and praised his economic record. “The president has been very successful,” she said. “I think the president doesn’t get the credit he and his team deserves for the way they navigated” the recession.”

She did add, however, “I would have differences, everyone would have differences, about what else could be done” in the early days of the administration.

Ukraine: One place where Clinton was willing to distance herself from the White House, if slightly, was in calling for great aid, both in training and equipment, to Ukrainian forces fighting Russian-backed separatists in the eastern part of the country.

Compromise over ideology: Clinton praised transactional leadership and called for a return to dealmaking. “That’s what we need to get back to doing, the art of compromise in our politics, rather than people staking out ideological positions,” she said.

And no Clinton appearance would be complete without some praise for her new granddaughter, Charlotte. Clinton said the four-month-old does not yet have a nickname for her the former secretary of state a likely presidential candidate, suggesting the name is a point of contention in the family. “The negotiations are harder than my secretary of state job,” she joked. Clinton said she’ she’ll let the baby choose a name – but “exercise a veto” if need be.

Associated Press: “Hillary Clinton declines to take position on Keystone”

By Ken Thomas

January 21, 2015, 11:18 p.m. EST

WINNIPEG, Manitoba (AP) — Hillary Rodham Clinton on Wednesday declined again to take a position on the Keystone XL pipeline, telling an audience in Canada that she would not express her views because of an ongoing review by the State Department.

"We have differences and you won't get me to talk about Keystone because I have steadily made clear that I'm not going to express an opinion," said Clinton, a potential 2016 Democratic presidential candidate. "It is in our process and that's where it belongs."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton was asked about U.S.-Canadian relations during a wide-ranging question-and-answer session in Winnipeg as Congress considers approving construction of the contentious, Canada-backed project. Making her first public remarks in a month, Clinton also touched upon the deadly terrorist attacks in Paris, President Barack Obama's State of the Union address and the debate in Congress over Iran.

Her views on Keystone have been closely watched in Canada. She has said it would be inappropriate for her to comment on whether the pipeline project should move ahead, given her past role as Obama's top diplomat and the State Department's ongoing assessment.

Obama has vowed to veto the congressional legislation as long as the State Department is still conducting a formal review of the project.

The TransCanada Corp. pipeline would carry more than 800,000 barrels of crude oil a day from Alberta and the U.S. Bakken oil field across six U.S. states to refineries on the Texas Gulf Coast.

The House authorized construction of the pipeline last week, and the Senate is now considering the legislation. Republican and Democratic supporters hope to win final approval on the measure and send it to the White House by the end of the week.

Republicans, the Canadian government and business and labor groups have pressured the Obama administration to approve the pipeline, arguing it would create jobs and move North America toward energy independence. Environmentalists want Obama to reject the pipeline, contending it would contribute to global warming and make the U.S. more vulnerable to oil spills.

For a possible Democratic presidential candidate, the politics of Keystone are tricky. Environmentalists and labor unions have been among the party's core supporters for years, and picking sides could alienate either group. One of the leading opponents is billionaire environmentalist Tom Steyer, who has poured millions of dollars into a super PAC that has promoted environmental causes.

Republican National Committee spokeswoman Kirsten Kukowski criticized Clinton's Keystone stance, saying if she "can't take a position on building a pipeline Americans overwhelmingly support, how can voters expect her to make the hard choices that come with being commander-in-chief and leader of the free world?"

Appearing onstage before nearly 2,000 people at an event sponsored by CIBC, a Canadian bank, Clinton commented on several American and international developments, including:

— Paris: Clinton said the recent terror attack in Paris showed that Western democracies are "in a contest of ideas" against extremism within the Muslim world. She said the "slaughter of satire writers and Jews and police officers sharpened the true contours of this struggle."

— Obama: Clinton said Obama's proposals in Tuesday's annual address to Congress could offer a good starting point for negotiations with majority Republicans and said the U.S. needs to do more for families struggling with "sagging wages and sinking hopes." Obama and his team have not received the "credit they deserve" for their stewardship of the economy since the recession, she said.

— Iran: The former New York senator said she opposed efforts in the Senate to ramp up sanctions on Iran if a deal preventing the country from developing nuclear weapons is not reached by early July. Clinton said new sanctions could give Iran and others an excuse not to continue with the negotiations. Obama has said he will veto any Iran sanctions bill that reaches his desk.

Clinton spoke later in the day at a similar event in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, where she called climate change an urgent challenge. "We're now at the point where global action is an absolute necessity," she said.

Clinton has largely stayed out of public view since mid-December. Her two paid speeches came as she is beginning to assemble the makings of a presidential campaign, though she has yet to announce her intentions. Clinton is working with close advisers and several former Obama campaign aides to prepare for the 2016 race and is expected to make a final decision in the spring.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CBC News: "Hillary Clinton speaks in Saskatoon"

[No Writer Mentioned]

January 21, 2015, 5:30 a.m. CST

The woman who may yet become the first female president of the United States spoke in Saskatoon Wednesday night at TCU Place.

The former U.S. secretary of state Hillary Rodham Clinton did not quite pack the house. But close to 2,000 people streamed in to hear the woman who is widely expected to make a second bid for the U.S. presidency. They paid in the range of $84 to $315 for the privilege.

Clinton focused most of her formal address on the topic of Islamic extremism -- and how the U.S. and Canada should respond. Coincidentally, it was the same evening that the Amadiyya Muslim Students' Association was holding a video presentation and discussion at the University of Saskatchewan, on Islamist de-radicalization.

Clinton spoke about the values of "tolerance and openness that define our democracies".

"Make no mistake," Clinton told her audience, "those were the values under assault in Paris. The slaughter of cartoonists and satirists, along with Jews and police officers truly sent a signal about what we are contesting."

She called it a "contest of ideas and values", adding that "Islam itself is not the adversary".

"But we can't close our eyes to the fact that there is a distorted and dangerous strain of extremism within the Muslim world that continues to spread," Clinton continued, calling it "a generational challenge" that must be "waged on multiple fronts simultaneously". Those include the effort to stop the spread of ISIS and other violent extremist groups in the Middle East. She also said there's a need to empower moderates and marginalize extremists in the wider Muslim world, as well as target extremist propaganda and recruitment.

"And we still have to do a much better job of contesting on-line space including websites, and chat rooms, where extremists inspire and recruit followers," Clinton said.

Having spoken in Winnipeg earlier in the day, Clinton described her visit to the newly opened Canadian Museum for Human Rights, where she found "so much information presented dramatically and poignantly about what it means to be deprived of your human rights".

Clinton also linked the struggle against extremism with "sharing prosperity more broadly and fairly".

During a question-and-answer session that followed, Clinton advanced the idea of a "North American energy system".

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"When I was in Winnipeg I talked about how there's a deal between Manitoba's hydroelectricity and some companies, utilities across the border that deal with clean energy, solar, wind and how we need to be looking for ways to connect ourselves up, to thicken the co-operation on energy among us," Clinton said.

However, there were two questions she would not touch -- her views on the Keystone XL oil pipeline, and whether she will indeed enter the upcoming U.S. presidential election.

The Hill blog: Ballot Box: "Hillary: Obama proposals 'an important start' on income inequality"

By Peter Sullivan

January 21, 2015, 3:41 p.m. EST

Hillary Clinton backed President Obama's broad approach on a range of economic issues while leaving room for some disagreement during an appearance in Canada on Wednesday.

She called Obama's State of the Union proposals, focused on boosting the middle class, "an important start for a critical debate."

As she heads towards a presidential run, Obama's bold economic messaging could shape the debate as she campaigns in 2016. Clinton did not take a position or bring up the specifics of Obama's proposal to raise taxes on the wealthy to pay for measures aimed at the middle class.

Clinton did focus on income inequality, an area of division that has led some liberals to urge Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.) to run.

She cited an Oxfam report that the world's 80 richest people have the same wealth as the bottom 3.5 billion people, raising the question of "How can we share prosperity more broadly and fairly?"

"Here in Canada, for example, you've shown that the economic inequality that we see in the United States and in many countries is not inevitable," she said.

"You've invested in your middle class and it's made a real difference," she added.

Clinton credited the Obama administration's handling of the 2008 financial crisis for the economic uptick, but left room to have handled some things differently.

"I think the president doesn't get the credit he and his team deserve for the way they navigated through this area," she said. "I would have had differences everybody would have had differences about what else could be done."

Her appearance came at an event in Winnipeg in the "Global Perspectives" series, sponsored by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On foreign policy, she mostly backed the president but called for more action to support Ukraine against Russia.

She said the Ukranian army has "proven that they are worthy of some greater support than we have up to date provided."

She has backed Obama's continued negotiations with Iran in the past, and continued that support. She disagreed with calls in Congress, including among some Democrats, for more sanctions.

"I take the position I think the president articulated last night," she said on Iran.

New sanctions would give China and Russia an excuse to drop out, she said.

"Why do we want to be the catalyst for the collapse of negotiations?" she said.

On one area, she had no comment, keeping with her past decision not to discuss the Keystone pipeline, citing her involvement in the approval process as secretary of State.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· February 24 – Santa Clara, CA: Sec. Clinton to Keynote Address at Inaugural Watermark Conference for Women (PR Newswire)

· March 4 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton to fundraise for the Clinton Foundation (WSJ)

· March 19 – Atlantic City, NJ: Sec. Clinton keynotes American Camp Association conference (PR Newswire)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Melanie Hart" <mhart@americanprogress.org>
To: John.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 6/22/2015 1:36:44 PM
Subject: Question for Premier Li Keqiang -- Refined Version

Hello John,

Below is the refined question you just conveyed via phone:

*****
As you know, 2015 presents an historic opportunity for the international community to reach ambitious new agreements on the intertwined global challenges of climate change and sustainable development. Increasing sustainable financing and decreasing unsustainable financing will be essential if we are to achieve our global development and climate change goals. That will require applying high environmental and social standards to our investments going forward. China will host the G20 next year in the midst of a growing international dialogue on sustainable investment standards. What is China's strategy for leveraging the G20, the Asian Infrastructure Investment Bank (AIIB), the South-South Cooperation Fund, the Silk Road Fund, and other bilateral and multilateral forums to help establish common global standards for sustainable financing?

*****

Will hold on sending until I receive either a green light or additional edits.

Background notes of potential interest:

Last Friday Zhang Gaoli attended the St. Petersburg International Economic Forum in Russia and delivered remarks re China's plans for the 2016 G20. His speech was very general but did contain some positive indicators: he said G20 nations should develop new driving forces for sustainable growth of the global economy. He also focused on China's Silk Road initiative, which he welcomed other countries to join. That suggests they are at least thinking about linking these other programs in with G20.

Terminology re China hosting G20: Turkey currently enjoys talking about the fact that they hold the "G20 presidency" but thus far Chinese state press is using the term "chair" instead of presidency.

The 2015 G20 summit will be November 14-15 in Turkey. Then Turkey hands the baton to China. The 2016 summit will be in Hangzhou, China (likely next fall, exact date TBD).

Thanks,
Melanie

Melanie M. Hart, Ph.D.
Director for China Policy
Center for American Progress
Direct Line: (202) 741-6359
Cell: (202) 294-6118

From: Molly Elgin-Cossart
Sent: Friday, June 19, 2015 2:36 PM
To: Melanie Hart; Eryn Sepp (EG); Erin M. Auel; Peter Ogden; John Norris
Cc: 'John.podesta@gmail.com'; 'Eryn Sepp'
Subject: Re: Your Question for Premier Li Keqiang

Makes sense to combine - and perhaps leading with G20 will draw out some responses about that, too.

1. I wonder whether it's useful to nail down any specifics on high quality, e.g. investing in sustainable technologies and services, in ways that comply with high social and governance standards - the downside is the risk of getting too focused on a back and forth on governance, though could be interesting to specify each component to see if he responds to each.
2. In the SDG financing world, China's official position is that ODA is still the main vehicle, so may be useful to say something to the effect of "increasing sustainable development financing, including harnessing a broader range of sources towards sustainable development is essential ". (REF recent official Chinese gov position paper on post-2015 which states: "Development financing should be enhanced with North-South cooperation serving as the main channel." This statement is a pure political play, since domestic resources are the main vehicle of SD financing and drove China's own rise, not to mention ODA is not terribly sustainable, but this line plays well with developing countries.) This may be adding too much into a single question, but thought it worthwhile to flag.

Cheers,

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Molly

From: Melanie Hart
Sent: Friday, June 19, 2015 2:24 PM
To: Eryn Sepp (EG); Erin M. Auel; Molly Elgin-Cossart; Peter Ogden; John Norris
Cc: 'John.podesta@gmail.com'; 'Eryn Sepp'
Subject: RE: Your Question for Premier Li Keqiang

John and team,

Pete combined the G20 questions into one shorter one and added a separate one on finance. Here's some updated suggested text from Pete:

(1) As you know, 2015 presents an historic opportunity for the international community to reach ambitious new agreements on the intertwined global challenges of climate change and sustainable development. How will China use its G20 presidency next year to drive further progress on these two issues?

(2) Relatedly, increasing sustainable financing -- and decreasing unsustainable financing -- is essential if we are to achieve our global development and climate change goals, and that will require applying high standards to our investments going forward. What can China do - bilaterally or through the G20, the AIIB, and other multilateral institutions --to help engrain these high standards?

I think Pete's finance language is excellent. My one concern is that if we send 2 questions, they might pick what is easiest to respond to rather than what we would find most interesting. One option would be to combine further, perhaps as follows:

As you know, 2015 presents an historic opportunity for the international community to reach ambitious new agreements on the intertwined global challenges of climate change and sustainable development. It is in this environment that China is taking on the G20 presidency, and many observers around the world will be watching next year to see how China leverages the G20 to drive further progress on these two issues. Observers will also be monitoring whether and to what degree China leverages the AIIB to achieve these important goals. Increasing sustainable financing -- and decreasing unsustainable financing -- is essential if we are to achieve our global development and climate change goals, and that will require applying high standards to our investments going forward. What can China do - bilaterally or through the G20, the AIIB, and other multilateral institutions --to help engrain these high standards?

Additional thoughts/reactions from the team?

Melanie

Melanie M. Hart, Ph.D.
Director for China Policy
Center for American Progress
Direct Line: (202) 741-6359
Cell: (202) 294-6118

From: Eryn Sepp [mailto:esepp@equitablegrowth.org]
Sent: Friday, June 19, 2015 12:55 PM
To: Melanie Hart; Erin M. Auel; Molly Elgin-Cossart; Peter Ogden; John Norris
Cc: 'John.podesta@gmail.com'; 'Eryn Sepp'
Subject: Your Question for Premier Li Keqiang Importance: High

Hi Everyone—

John wants to respond on here to you all. He thinks we need to combine the two questions into one, and put a high standards sustainable finance question in.

Melanie, do we know who else is getting to ask questions?

John, the plain text is below:

To: John Podesta
From: Melanie Hart, Erin Auel, Molly Elgin-Cossart, Pete Ogden, John Norris

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Re: Quick Response Needed – Your Question for Premier Li Keqiang
Date: June 19, 2015

You are attending the China Center for International Economic Exchanges (CCIEE) think tank summit in Beijing June 26-27. There will be a side meeting with Li Keqiang. Around 40 guest scholars and officials will attend. You are one of the high-level conference speakers invited to attend the Li Keqiang meeting. You have also been invited to ask Premier Li a question. In that meeting only four people will ask questions (yourself included). CCIEE tells us the questions must be submitted in advance, no later than Monday evening (June 22) U.S. time. We should treat this as a hard deadline.

We suggest posing the following question:

Next year China will host the G20. Many nations around the world will be watching to see how China handles its G20 presidency and what that tells us about how China's rise will impact multilateral institutions. What does the Chinese government currently consider to be its top priorities for China's 2016 G20 presidency? As you know, 2015 is a very big year for sustainable development and climate change. We hope to see big progress this year on the Post-2015 Sustainable Development Goals and at the UNFCCC Conference of the Parties in Paris. Is the Chinese leadership thinking about how China can use its G20 presidency to unify and strengthen G20 support for implementing multilateral agendas on sustainable development and climate change?

Please share your thoughts asap (and no later than Monday evening) so that we can pass your preferred question on to Premier Li's team.

Additional meeting details below.

I. Meeting Format

Li will lead the meeting and do most of the talking. He has selected four people, including you, to ask questions. There is no pre-set theme for the meeting, but we have been told you are welcome to ask questions on topics including sustainable development, think tank cooperation, and economic issues.

II. Potential Participants

The meeting hosts have invited about 40 guest scholars and officials to attend the meeting. That group includes:

BAN Ki-moon, Secretary-General of the United Nations (video speech)
Romano PRODI, President of the Foundation for Worldwide Cooperation, Professor at China Europe International Business School, Former Prime Minister of Italy
Danilo TURK, Professor of International Law, Former President of Slovenia
Kevin RUDD, President of the Asia Society Policy Institute, Former Prime Minister of Australia
Sir Don MCKINNON, Chairman of New Zealand China Council, Former Commonwealth Secretary General, Former Deputy Prime Minister of New Zealand
Grzegorz W. KOLODKO, Founder and Director of Transformation, Integration and Globalization Economic Research, Former Deputy Premier of Poland
Thomas SARGENT, 2011 Nobel Laureate in Economics, Professor of Economics at New York University
WU Hongbo, Under Secretary-General of the United Nations
William BURNS, President of Carnegie Endowment for International Peace
Nubuo TANAKA, President of the Sasakawa Peace Foundation, Former Executive Director of International Energy Agency

III. Biography of Li Keqiang

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Li Keqiang (Ke-chung) is the second-highest ranking official in the CCP. He is currently a member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, premier of the State Council and secretary of its Leading Party Members' Group. From 2008-2013, he was vice premier of the State Council and deputy secretary of its Leading Party Members' Group. In this role, he oversaw a portfolio of issues including economic development, price controls, finance, climate change, and macroeconomic management. During that time, he also directed the Three Gorges Project Construction Committee and of South-to-North Water Diversion Construction Project Committee. In 2013, he became Premier of the State Council. He has focused on economic development and meeting China's growth targets. He has also led efforts to set targets for reducing energy intensity, cap coal use, and boost renewable capacity. At a meeting of the National Leading Group on Climate Change on June 12, 2015, he backed China's commitments through the UNFCCC, stating "China stands ready to work with all other parties to ensure a comprehensive, balanced and strong agreement at the upcoming Paris Conference."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: Nancybk@aol.com
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
andrew_imparato@help.senate.gov
Date: 8/28/2013 12:44:00 PM
Subject: Fwd: LA Times Op-Ed – Give Careivers a Break; It Would Be Nice If It Was One

---

From: Nancybk@aol.com
To: Sue.Horton@latimes.com
Sent: 8/28/2013 1:49:11 P.M. Pacific Daylight Time
Subj: LA Times Op-Ed – Give Careivers a Break; It Would Be Nice If It Was One

Dear Editor;

In your editorial, "Give Caregivers a Break" you fail to understand that it isn't a break at all. It has been admitted by those who proposed the changes to Companionship Exemption, that it will not result in government funded home care workers being paid overtime. What will result is that caregivers will have their hours capped. The amount of hours anyone is allowed to work will be decreased from about 280 a month to 160, because the National Association of Medicaid Directors all say that their budgets are too strapped to pay overtime, and this is true.

What this change will do, rather than giving "caregivers a break," is devastate the homes of family caregivers who rely on that family income to be able to stay home with their disabled family member. What the unfunded change in the companionship exemption will do is separate people with disabilities from the live-in caregivers they've had for decades. Their loyal workers will see their take-home pay cut. They will have to pay for apartments, gas to new jobs to supplement lost income (if they can find them), and in some cases, pay for childcare, because they never had to leave the home to go to work before the change.

In my own case, it creates an earthquake in the house of cards I live in, as newspapers and legislatures and unions pontificate and mess with the program that is already so difficult to survive on if you have no family member to care for you. The augmentations to the program that people with disabilities ask for -- the people who really live with this program, are things like someone paying $57 for criminal background checks so that our impoverished workers don't have to pay this up front, when they may not get paid for a month or two or longer because the system is so clogged up trying to deal with all the other "good ideas," to prevent fraud that isn't there.

We asked for things like our incoming caregivers getting paid for training which they don't. We asked for emergency backup services so our attendants don't have to work when they're sick and we don't have sit up in our wheelchairs all night if someone doesn't show up to put us to bed. We need these backup services so our caregivers can get paid vacations, so they don't have to work for years at a time without them. No one listens to us, people with disabilities and our workers who ask for these things year after year.

It is well-meaning, ill-informed people like those on your editorial board, and legislators, and unions so out of touch with or maybe simply don't care about the real problems of their own rank-and-file providers, that they could decimate their living situations and income this way – – and by the way, double and possibly triple their coffers by collecting two and three dues out of the house where they once collected only one. Parties that understand little about what it takes to live on this program have their superficial little theoretical ideas, that are not thought through far enough as to how they will really play out in the lives of real people. It is these well-meaning, unknowing, powerful players who push through one onerous change after another, puffing a little harder each time to blow my house down.

The editorial board also fails to understand the Russian Roulette pistol aimed at the heads of the Seniors, People with Disabilities and our Home Care Workers who depend on it, every year when budgets are cut. Although overtime pay would be great for IHSS providers, in publicly funded Medicaid programs, states that are cutting IHSS (In Home Supportive Services) are not likely to provide overtime pay and will instead most likely cut hours worked above 160 hours a month for any one provider.

I know of a proud union member, a mother over 60, who has multiple disabilities of her own and takes care of her adult son with athetoid cerebral palsy who will see her household income of about $2520 a month in California drop to $1431, as her hours are cut from 280 hours a month to 160 hours. She doesn't have the stamina to supplement her income with more jobs and she has trouble finding other caregivers because her son cannot be understood very well by others. The union has taken over $40 a month from her for check each month to lobby for what will cut her income by a pretty big fraction. 70% of the caregivers in California are family members whose households stay intact with IHSS. A cut in hours can threaten their ability to stay in their homes. Seniors and People with Disabilities with Live in Caregivers will be uprooted as well. Jerry Brown just got done settling a lawsuit trying to cut the IHSS program in California by 20% and settled for cutting it by8 percent. Do you really think he's going to take time and a half for over 50,000 providers? His representative on an Olmsted conference said they wouldn't.

When I was in the Young Socialist Alliance in college, before I had my accident, I believed in theories in a vacuum. Then I became disabled and saw how these things work out on a real-life level. In California, we have the most highly advanced In-Home Supportive Services program, and the reason it was so good is that the disabled person received money to find somebody and all of that money went directly to the caregiver. The attendant got all the bang for the buck. And while ADAPT American Disabled for Attendant Programs Today was fighting to get In Home Care, this wonderful program to all the states, they came up with things like "Money Follows the Person" and "Community First Choice Option" where that money continued to go to the disabled person to pay directly to their caregiver with no middleman.

But suddenly all kinds of profiteering is going on as big bad corporations and yes even sometimes big bad unions behaviors are immerging as monied interests smell a beautiful dollar to be made in the graying of the baby boomers. On a good day the union is our greatest blessing on a bad day they are our greatest curse. The only way to come up with a reasonable solution that takes everyone's welfare into account is to sit down and work it out. I think what's been most frightening to me in all of this is the ease with which able-bodied regard People with Disabilities as invisible. The SEIU would not even sit down at the table with People with Disabilities to work out a compromise until the rules were already written. Would this happen to a person of color? Are we the last population to be seen as a fraction of a person -- or a person who is really there at all?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

People have been making industries of people with disabilities for decades, in the nursing home industry, the charity industry, and now the medical industrial complex and by the unions too on a bad day. People from ADAPT clawed our ways out of nursing homes that were profiteering off of us and now we have to fight against the nursing agency industry, managed care corporations, and even at times a union that is so out of touch with its rank and file providers needs that it would create three crappy jobs from one not so good one in order to collect two or three union dues on a one house.

It is the people disabilities and rank-and-file providers, who are in a symbiotic relationship, huddled together to keep industries and unions from objectifying us and moving us around like "furniture" in their business plans. The LA times editorial board members can choose to be naïve and come up with lovely little fairy lands in your own minds, but make no mistake, your naïveté will be paid for by the rank-and-file workers whose pay will be cut badly and people with disabilities who will go back to nursing homes.

The ADAPT-NCIL compromise would simply eliminate the exemption for third party employers, treating Medicaid consumers in consumer directed programs (including public authorities, fiscal intermediaries and agencies with choice) the same as private employers so they can still use the existing exemption. According to the DOL analysis, this change - alone - would eliminate the companionship exemption for 70% of home care workers. It covers all of the "bad players" and concerns raised in the DOL analysis that exist in traditional home care while minimizing the negative impact on people with disabilities and preventing the unexpected consequences such changes would have on real live people in Medicaid funded programs.

Where were our points of view in this discussions? Why include us? It's only our bodies, our civil rights, our freedom from live lives akin to political prisoners in iinstitutions! If anyone had any respect for people with disabilities we would have included us in the discussion.

Nancy Becker Kennedy

Appointed Member Since Its Inception
Los Angeles County Public Authority Board PASC that oversees the In Home Care of over 200,000 Seniors and People with Disabilities

Join the IHSS Consumers Union on Facebook at http://www.facebook.com/groups/IHSS.ConsumersUnion/

"Nothing About Us Without Us!" (Latin: "Nihil de nobis, sine nobis") is a slogan used to communicate the idea that no policy should be decided by any representative without the full and direct participation of members the group(s) affected by that policy. This involves national, ethnic, disability based or other groups that are often thought to be marginalized from political, social, and economic opportunities.

also read: http://washingtonexaminer.com/article/2533602http://washingtonexaminer.com/article/2533602http://washingtonexaminer.com/article/2533602http://www.latimes.com/news/opinion/editorials/la-ed-domestic-workers-20130801,0,4211711.story#tugs_story_display

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	VoteVets <info@votevets.org>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	8/27/2015 9:56:52 AM
Subject:	Send a message to Senator Mark Kirk

VoteVets.org
Country. Service. Action.

John -

Suffering in the polls, Senator Mark Kirk will say ANYTHING to bolster his re-election chances - even if that means marching the United States closer to another war, this time with Iran.

Over 15,000 veterans, military family members, and VoteVets supporters have called on Senator Kirk to apologize for comparing our negotiators to Nazi appeasers - add your name to theirs:

Tell Mark Kirk to put his country ahead of his campaign and apologize for comparing State Department diplomats to Nazi appeasers.

The State Department, nuclear scientists, and some of our strongest allies around the world support the deal with Iran, and the Senate should ratify the accord.

We're going to keep working to make sure that the voices of veterans are elevated in this debate.

Thanks for joining us.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The Team at VoteVets

Contribute

PAID FOR BY VOTEVETS ACTION FUND

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com. If that is not your preferred email address, click here . Click here if you'd like to unsubscribe. We try to send only the most important information and opportunities to participate via email. To sustain VoteVets with a contribution click here .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jonathan Garthwaite" <THeditor@TownHallmail.com>
To: Friend <JohnPodesta@gmail.com>
Date: 3/9/2016 7:51:01 AM
Subject: Is Cruz Our Last Hope To Beat Trump?

Townhall.com
CELEBRATING 20 YEARS

Having trouble viewing this email? View it in your browser

Fresh, Conservative, Intelligent Reporting | Facebook
Twitter

Columnists | Tipsheet | News | Cartoons | Videos

TRENDING: U.S. Dollar Losing Ground... 2016 Collapse Imminent?
Ron Paul urges Americans to buy Silver to prepare for the economic collapse in 2016...
Click Here for Your Free Gov't Debt Survival Guide

Must Reads

The Reckoning: A Cruz Coalescence Conundrum

Guy Benson

As we stated this morning, it is now obvious that Ted Cruz

RNC Sues for Hillary's State Dept Records

Cortney O'Brien

The government failed to answer the Republican National Committee's request for Hillary Clinton's State Department records last October and December, so they are sending Washington a friendly reminder. [Keep Reading]

Surreal: Hillary Doubles Down on 'No Classified Material' Lie

Guy Benson

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

has emerged as the only conservative alternative to Donald Trump, having defeated the controversial billionaire in Iowa, Texas, Oklahoma, Alaska, Kansas, Maine, and Idaho.
[Keep Reading]

Mitt Romney Reads Mean Tweets on Jimmy Kimmel
Christine Rousselle

Aloha: Trump Wins Hawaii, Claiming Third Tuesday Victory
Guy Benson

Decision Desk Issues Mea Culpa After Premature Call of Michigan Race
Christine Rousselle

Great: A Dozen More Released Gitmo Detainees Have Gone 'Back to Battle'
Cortney O'Brien

Carly Fiorina Endorses Ted Cruz
Christine Rousselle

Obama To Skip Nancy Reagan's Funeral, Will Appear At SXSW Conference In Texas Instead
Matt Vespa

TRENDING:
U.S. Dollar Losing Ground...
2016 Collapse Imminent?
Ron Paul urges Americans to buy Silver to prepare for the economic collapse in 2016
Click Here for Your Free Gov't Debt Survival Guide

AFP Boasts Of Record High Voter Engagement As They Prepare For War With Obama's Regulatory Agenda
Matt Vespa

AFP continues to lead the fight against an ever-encroaching Washington D.C.
[Keep Reading]

In a rare Fox News appearance Monday, Hillary Clinton was confronted by anchor Bret Baier with her March 2015 assertion that "there is no classified material" on her improper, unsecure, national security-compromising email server.
[Keep Reading]

TRENDING:
U.S. Dollar Losing Ground...
2016 Collapse Imminent?
Ron Paul urges Americans to buy Silver to prepare for the economic collapse in 2016
Click Here for Your Free Gov't Debt Survival Guide

Columnists & Tipsheet

Springtime for Pundits
Ann Coulter

Hillary's Federal Education Jackboot Squad
Michelle Malkin

Libertarian Lite
John Stossel

The Seen and Unseen
Walter E. Williams

Diner Offers "Dictator Obama" Breakfast Special
Todd Starnes

ISIS and Christian Genocide
Brent Bozell

Conservative Purists Are Capitulating With Support of Trump
Jonah Goldberg

Texas Abortion Law Meets Bill Clinton's Standards
Star Parker

Political Cartoons

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Whoa: Israeli Stabbed by Palestinian Terrorist Pulls Knife Out of Neck And Kills Attacker With It

Leah Barkoukis

Israel has its own Chuck Norris and his name is Yonatan Azarihab.
[Keep Reading]

Awful: German Waterpark Forced To Segregate After Afghan Migrant Sexual Assaults

Matt Vespa

Last week, another event occurred at the hands of migrant Muslim men; they assaulted two teenage girls at a local waterpark.
[Keep Reading]

Terrific: Iran Might Walk Away From Obama's Historic Nuke Deal

Katie Pavlich

It hasn't even been a year since President Obama announced a historic agreement with Iran last July, but according to the Free Beacon's Adam Kredo, Iran is threatening to walk away from the deal.
[Keep Reading]

Loretta Lynch to White House: Take Me Off The SCOTUS List

Matt Vespa

If the interview with Fox News' Bret Baier after Super Tuesday wasn't a good enough hint, then Attorney General Loretta Lynch made it official last night: she doesn't want to be on the Supreme Court.
[Keep Reading]

State Department Gives Cover to Palestinians After Terrorist Murders American in Israel

Katie Pavlich

American Taylor Allen Force was murdered in Israel yesterday after being attacked by a terrorist, but based on a statement released by the State Department, you would never know the person who carried out the attack was a Palestinian.
[Keep Reading]

Bearing Arms

Oregon State Police Justified in Shooting Oregon Bundy Protestor | Bob Owens

BREAKING: Synched LaVoy Finicum Shooting Video | Bob Owens

Study: Indiana Epicenter For Black Homicides, Gun Control Advocates Blame Lax Gun Laws | Matt Vespa

ICYMI: South Carolina House Votes To Nullify Federal Gun Regulations | Matt Vespa

Title IX Makes the Case for Campus Carry | Jenn Jacques

Political News

Sanders points to new momentum after Michigan victory | AP News

Denial of in-state tuition for certain immigrants challenged | AP News

Russian group: Journalists attacked near Chechnya border | AP News

The Latest: House Speaker Ryan visits Nancy Reagan's casket | AP News

Sailor killed at Pearl Harbor gets funeral 75 years later | AP News

Obamacare in Full Effect
Plus: 2014 Senate Races

TRENDING: U.S. Dollar Losing Ground... 2016 Collapse Imminent?
Ron Paul urges Americans to buy Silver to prepare for the economic collapse in 2016...
Click Here for Your Free Gov't Debt Survival Guide

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Connect with Us

Facebook

Twitter

_____SUBSCRIPTION INFO_____

This newsletter is never sent unsolicited. It was sent to you because you signed up to receive this newsletter on the Townhall.com network OR a friend forwarded it to you. We respect and value your time and privacy. If this newsletter no longer meets your needs we will be happy to remove your address immediately.

You can unsubscribe from the Townhall Daily by clicking here .

Or Send postal mail to:
Townhall Daily Unsubscribe
1735 N. Lynn St - Suite 510, Arlington, VA 22209

* Copyright Townhall and its Content Providers.
All rights reserved.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 9/6/2014 9:41:33 AM
Subject: Israel's Video Justifying Destruction of a Gaza Hospital Was From 2009

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Saturday, 6 September 2014

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

Israel's Video Justifying Destruction of a Gaza Hospital Was From 2009

Gareth Porter, Truthout: A Truthout investigation reveals that a video prepared by the Israeli military to justify the destruction of Gaza's Al-Wafa Hospital used audio and video clips from two other incidents to suggest that Palestinian fighters had been firing from the hospital.

Read the Article

NATO Should Be Retired, Not Repurposed!

Joseph Gerson, Truthout: In this speech delivered at the NATO Counter Summit in Wales on August 31, peace activist Joseph Gerson decries NATO's role in the Ukraine conflict, warns of the nuclear dangers first strike threats pose and offers hope for nuclear disarmament.

Read the Speech

Emmett Till, Michael Brown and the Ongoing Struggle for Racial Justice

Peter Dreier, Truthout: Will the killing of 18-year-old Michael Brown play a similar catalytic role that Emmett Till's murder, and the acquittal of his killers, did back then? Will it spark the necessary action for racial justice in the United States which has never been effected?

Read the Article

Better Off Dead: Black Women Speak to the United Nations CERD Committee

Farah Tanis and Aishah Shahidah Simmons, The Feminist Wire: A historic delegation of black women from the United States went to face the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination to speak of the atrocities and havoc wrought by racism on lives of women across sexualities and gender identities in this country.

Read the Article

Postcards From the County

Hugh Christopher Brown, Truthout: The number of people in prison who have experienced violence

BuzzFlash

The BuzzFlash commentary for Truthout will return soon.

BP, Found Grossly Negligent, May Face $18 Billion in Gulf Spill Fines

Read the Article at the Los Angeles Times

Approximately a Third of Americans Have Been the Victim of Sexual Violence

Read the Article at the Smithsonian

More SF Landlords Evicting Tenants Without Any Evidence, According to New Housing Report

Read the Article at CBS Local

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

and loss is humbling, as a jail house music program director learns. But their voices sound quite different from those calling for vengeance on the outside.

Read the Article

Six Ways to Bring More Empathy to the Internet

Liz Pleasant, YES! Magazine: Psychologists, user experience designers and writers were asked what web users could to do to promote more empathic interaction in online places. Here's what they said.

Read the Article

Marta Harnecker: New Paths Require a New Culture on the Left

Marta Harnecker, Translated by Federico Fuentes, International Journal of Socialist Renewal: Venezuela's Hugo Chavez was convinced that socialism could not be decreed from above, that it had to be built with the people. He also understood that participation is what allows people to develop themselves as human beings.

Read the Speech

Dealer Joins Dots Between Climate and Aboriginal Art

Mat Ward, Green Left Weekly: Australian Aboriginal art could be viewed as a particular culture's prescient response to the most pressing threat to humankind. An art dealer asks if humankind and Aboriginal art could help save each other.

Read the Article

Willie Nelson and Neil Young Come to the Aid of Bold Nebraska

Dave Saldana, PRWatch: Country music legend Willie Nelson and Rock & Roll Hall of Famer Neil Young will be performing next month in Neligh, Nebraska, to raise money for Bold Nebraska, the Indigenous Environmental Network and the Cowboy & Indian Alliance, groups continuing to fight against Keystone XL and the threat it poses to their land and water.

Read the Article

Golden Weapons of Destruction Take Aim at El Salvador

John Cavanagh and Robin Broad, OtherWords: Why do companies have the right to sue countries over environmental protection measures? The government of El Salvador is fighting a foreign mining company to protect its main water source. The outcome will be precedent-setting.

Read the Article

Obama to Delay Executive Action on Immigration Until After Election

Read the Article at The Washington Post

Feds Planning Massive Family Detention Center in South Texas

Read the Article at the Texas Observer

Republicans Make Big Advances Thanks to Citizens United

Read the Article at The Institute for Southern Studies

Get on the Bus: Inside the Black Life Matters "Freedom Ride" to Ferguson

Read the Article at Colorlines

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages

Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047

Subscribe | Unsubscribe

Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Karl Frisch, Media Matters" <kfrisch@mediamatters.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 8/14/2008 5:01:39 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Resources for the anti-Obama books by Corsi & Freddoso...

As most of you probably know, Media Matters obtained the two new anti-Obama books (Corsi and Freddoso) before their publication and for the past two weeks we have been pushing out research on their factual problems as well as details about the authors and publishers. I thought I'd pass along the research we've put out thus far in an effort to arm folks with the facts so Corsi, Freddoso, their publishers and the media outlets that put them on air without challenging their work can be called out and held accountable.

Also, if you didn't catch it last night, Larry King Live brought on Media Matters Senior Fellow Paul Waldman to debate Corsi on the problems with his new book. The video, which can be viewed here (the link also has code for embedding):

http://mediamatters.org/embed/larryking-20080813-corsi

Karl Frisch
202-772-8156

 INDEX ***

1. Research on Jerome Corsi
2. Research on Corsi's “The Obama Nation”
3. Research on Freddoso's “The Case Against Barack Obama”

****
1) RESEARCH ON CORSI (from Media Matters, 2004)
****

MMFA investigates: Who is Jerome Corsi, co-author of Swift Boat Vets attack book? (08/06/2004)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200408060010

While much has been written about the identity and history of John E. O'Neill -- one of the authors of the forthcoming Regnery book Unfit for Command: Swift Boat Veterans Speak Out Against John Kerry (whose links in the GOP go back to his days as "protégé of Nixon-era dirty trickster Charles Colson") -- little has been said about his co-author, Jerome R. Corsi, PhD.

* Corsi on Islam: "a worthless, dangerous Satanic religion"
* Corsi on Catholicism: "Boy buggering in both Islam and Catholicism is okay with the Pope as long as it isn't reported by the liberal press"
* Corsi on Muslims: "RAGHEADS are Boy-Bumpers as clearly as they are Women-Haters -- it all goes together"
* Corsi on "John F*ing Commie Kerry": "After he married TerRAHsa, didn't John Kerry begin practicing Judiasm? He also has paternal grandparents that were Jewish. What religion is John Kerry?"
* Corsi on Senator "FAT HOG" Clinton: "Anybody ask why HELLary couldn't keep BJ Bill satisfied? Not lesbo or anything, is she?"

****
2) RESEARCH ON CORSI'S “The Obama Nation”
****

Unfit for Publication: Corsi's The Obama Nation filled with falsehoods (08/04/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808040005

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Summary: In its preface, Jerome Corsi compares his new book, The Obama Nation, to his 2004 book Unfit for Command. The comparison seems apt: Just as Unfit for Command contains false attacks on Sen. John Kerry's military service, a Media Matters review finds that The Obama Nation similarly contains numerous falsehoods about Sen. Barack Obama.

*****

Corsi reportedly scheduled to appear on "pro-White" radio show (08/14/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808140003

Summary: Despite stating that he had apologized for what was described as a "series of bigoted and hateful posts," Jerome Corsi, author of The Obama Nation, is scheduled to appear with host James Edwards on the August 17 edition of The Political Cesspool Radio Show, which, according to its "Statement of Principles," "represent[s] a philosophy that is pro-White." In a blog post, Edwards has stated that "[i]nterracial sex is white genocide."

*****

On Hannity & Colmes, Corsi still compounding book falsehoods with further falsehoods (08/13/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808130007

Summary: On Hannity & Colmes, Jerome Corsi claimed that the "whole point" of his book The Obama Nation is that the assertion by Sen. Barack Obama that he stopped using illegal drugs when he went to college is "not reliable." But Corsi does not make that point in his book; rather, Corsi falsely asserted that Obama "has yet to answer questions" about his drug use. Sean Hannity asked Corsi, "[D]o we know if he ever sold drugs[?]" -- though Hannity has previously asserted that such a question was a manifestation of "politics of personal destruction."

*****

During interview with Corsi, CNN Headline News' Glenn Beck on Obama: "[T]his guy really is a Marxist" (08/06/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808060009

Summary: On his CNN Headline News program, Glenn Beck said of Sen. Barack Obama, "The thing that I do find about Barack Obama is that -- and I think America is starting to catch on to this -- this guy really is a Marxist. He believes in the redistribution of wealth." Beck has previously said of Barack and Michelle Obama, "[T]here's a socialist agenda there for America."

*****

Confronted by MSNBC’s Brewer over falsehood, Corsi responds with two more (08/06/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808060006

Summary: After being confronted by MSNBC's Contessa Brewer on his book's false claim that Sen. Barack Obama did not dedicate his own book to his mother and grandparents, Jerome Corsi responded with two more falsehoods.

*****

On Fox & Friends, Corsi contradicted his own book with another false claim (08/05/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808050010

Summary: In The Obama Nation, Jerome Corsi writes that Sen. Barack Obama "has yet to answer" the question of whether "he stopped using marijuana and cocaine completely in college." But on Fox & Friends, Jerome Corsi contradicted that assertion, stating that Obama "fully admitted his drug use, both marijuana and cocaine. He says it continued through college." In fact, both of Corsi's allegations are false; Obama wrote in his memoir that he "stopped getting high" shortly after moving to New York City to attend Columbia University as an undergraduate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

*****

Citing Media Matters report on Obama Nation falsehoods, MSNBC's Brewer asked Corsi: "[W]hy should we give you the credibility?" (08/05/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808050004

Summary: While interviewing Jerome Corsi, author of the recently released book The Obama Nation: Leftist Politics and the Cult of Personality, MSNBC's Contessa Brewer cited a Media Matters report detailing what she said were "some eight, nine, 10 pages of factual errors" in the book, and asked Corsi: "[I]f they are finding one, then why do you get credibility for the book?"

*****

On three Hannity programs, Corsi offered another falsehood: Obama supports abortion "[a]fter a child's born" (08/02/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808020004

Summary: Jerome Corsi, author of the book, The Obama Nation, falsely claimed on Hannity's America that Sen. Barack Obama said, "Even if a child was born ... the woman still had the right to kill the child in an abortion." Corsi similarly falsely asserted on Hannity & Colmes that "[a]fter a child's born, Obama ... in the [Illinois] state Senate, wanted the child killed if the mother desired an abortion," and on Sean Hannity's radio program, said that "Obama's on record as let's kill the baby if that's what the mother wants." In fact, Obama has never supported giving people the right to kill their children.

*****

Publisher's promotional materials for Corsi's Obama Nation echo falsehood and baseless charge in book (08/02/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808020003

Summary: Simon & Schuster's promotional materials for Jerome Corsi's book, The Obama Nation, echo Corsi's false claims and baseless charges about Sen. Barack Obama's Global Poverty Act and his views on nuclear weapons.

*****

On Hannity & Colmes, another Corsi falsehood about Obama (08/01/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808010003

Summary: On Hannity & Colmes, author Jerome Corsi claimed that in his upcoming book, The Obama Nation, "I do a great deal of analysis of [Sen. Barack Obama's] autobiography." Corsi then asserted, "Obama first presents his father as a great hero, and the truth was, his father was a polygamist and a alcoholic." However, contrary to Corsi's suggestion that Obama did not address these issues in his memoir Dreams From My Father, he discusses his father's alcoholism and polygamy in multiple passages in the book.

*****

First reported allegation in Corsi's Obama attack book is false (07/31/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200807310003

Summary: A WorldNetDaily.com article about author Jerome Corsi's forthcoming book, The Obama Nation, asserts that the book "points out" that "Barack Obama admitted using drugs in his autobiography but never revealed if or when he stopped." In fact, Obama wrote in his autobiography, Dreams from My Father, that he "stopped getting high" shortly after moving to New York City to attend Columbia University.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

*****

In covering forthcoming anti-Obama books, will media repeat Swift Boat coverage mistakes? (07/30/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200807300005

Summary: Two books attacking Sen. Barack Obama are scheduled to be released in early August: The Obama Nation, by Jerome Corsi -- co-author of Unfit for Command, which contains false and baseless attacks on Sen. John Kerry's military service -- and The Case Against Barack Obama, by David Freddoso. Regnery, publisher of The Case Against Barack Obama, touts the book as having the same "goal" as Unfit for Command, which Regnery also published. The overt connections between the Swift Boat Veterans for Truth's scurrilous campaign against Kerry and the two forthcoming books raise the question for the media: Will they have absorbed the lessons of their highly flawed Swift Boat coverage and give more immediate and more thorough scrutiny to these forthcoming books?

****
3) RESEARCH ON FREDDOSO'S “The Case Against Barack Obama”
****

Misinformation in Freddoso's anti-Obama book comes early (08/01/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808010005

Summary: The introduction and first few pages of David Freddoso's forthcoming book, The Case Against Barack Obama, are marked by false and misleading assertions about Obama, accompanied by dubious citations.

*****

Citations in Freddoso's anti-Obama book rife with misinformation (08/05/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808050011

Summary: The first few pages of David Freddoso's book, The Case Against Barack Obama, are marked by false and misleading assertions about Sen. Barack Obama, accompanied by dubious citations. A Media Matters review of the endnotes reveals that the rest of the book is little different from these first few pages, as throughout the book, Freddoso misrepresents or distorts his sources and even makes assertions that are actually refuted by sources he cites.

*****

Weekly Standard's Hayes notes "significant problems" with Corsi book, but promotes problematic Freddoso book (08/14/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808140006

Summary: On CNN, The Weekly Standard's Stephen Hayes said that Jerome Corsi's falsehood-laden book The Obama Nation "certainly sounds like it has some significant problems with it." Later, speaking about National Review writer David Freddoso, author of The Case Against Barack Obama, Hayes said, "[H]e's a serious reporter, and he's ... gone back, he's looked at Obama's votes in the Illinois state Senate." But Media Matters has documented numerous examples of misinformation in Freddoso's book, as well as in Corsi's.

*****

Fox News' Colmes pressed Freddoso over voting "technicality" claim (08/05/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808050007

Summary: On Hannity & Colmes, Alan Colmes questioned David Freddoso's assertion in his new book that Sen. Barack Obama "thr[e]w all of his opponents off the ballot on a technicality, so that those voters have no choice but to elect him. This is precisely how he first won his state Senate seat in 1996." But Colmes pointed out that the "technicality" that Freddoso described included allegedly forged petitions and signatures reportedly from people who did not live within the district that the Senate seat represented.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

*****

Ignoring key facts, MSNBC's Witt agreed with Freddoso that Obama's opponents in 1996 race were disqualified on a "technicality" (08/06/08)
http://mediamatters.org/items/200808060012

Summary: During an interview with David Freddoso, MSNBC's Alex Witt baselessly adopted a word Freddoso used to describe how Sen. Barack Obama challenged his opponents' qualifications for appearing on the ballot of the 1996 Illinois state Senate Democratic primary for the 13th district, saying that Obama's opponents were disqualified on a "technicality." In fact, one of Obama's opponents in that 1996 race reportedly admitted that he "now suspects" some of the signatures his campaign collected were forged, while another reportedly had some of her signatures disqualified because they were from voters who lived outside the 13th district -- facts Witt did not raise during the interview.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Eryn Sepp" <esepp@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com> "Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	4/30/2015 10:59:41 AM
Subject:	Michael Werz: German Public TV re: Russia / Uranium Deal

Hi John and Jen--

Michael Werz was approached about doing German Public TV next Tuesday re: Russia and the Uranium deal. They would have asked for you John, but you're not going to be in DC for quite some time during their filming schedule.

He's asking what we can give him in the way of surrogate TPs on CF as well as on the deal, if the campaign comes up, and he imagines it will.

He knows about the piece from the Daily Caller on Podesta Group, so is also asking if we want him to take any particular angle on that as well.

If we can share anything to help him, I wanted to make sure I had 1) the most updated version and 2) approval to do so.

(Also, I imagine he's going on the show in his CAP capacity. Do we need to be careful about that? He reached out via personal channels to keep things separate.)

Thank you,
Eryn

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	ricesusane@aol.com
To:	dmcdonough@barackobama.com mlippert@barackobama.com djsberg@gmail.com tblinken@barackobama.com john.podesta@gmail.com john.podesta@ptt.gov
Date:	11/7/2008 8:17:07 AM
Subject:	Proposed Briefings to be Requested

Below is the list of briefings Jim and I propose we request of the IC and others for senior transition national security staff over the coming weeks.

A subset of these TBD could subsequently be requested for POTUS-E and VPOTUS-E. We leave it to others to decide if it is desirable and appropriate for POTUS-E to request any or all of these in his meeting with Bush on Monday).

We welcome your thoughts.

IC

Iraq
Iran
Afghanistan
Pakistan
Russia
China
MEPP and region
Mexico
Counter-narcotics and Crime
North Korea
Al Qaeda and global CT threat
Global WMD Threat (bio, chem and nuclear)
Cybersecurity and CI
IRDPA briefs

NSC

Policy briefings on:

Iraq
Iran
Afghanistan
Pakistan
Russia
China
MEPP and region
North Korea
Al Qaeda and global CT threat
Global WMD Threat (bio, chem and nuclear) Cybersecurity
Mexico
Counter-narcotics and Crime
Syria

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Lebanon
Egypt
Saudi Arabia
Darfur
Zimbabwe DRC
Weak States strategy

OMB

Budget briefing

DOD

Ongoing Operations
Iraq
Afghanistan
Pakistan
Nuclear safety and security
Readiness

Homeland Security

Infrastructure security
Border security
Disease/pandemic preparedness
First respone/disaster preparedness
Crisis Response plans/processes and continuity in government

Instant access to the latest & most popular FREE games while you browse with the Games Toolbar - Download Now!

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Adrienne Elrod" <aelrod@hillaryclinton.com>
To: "Adrienne Elrod" <aelrod@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 1/23/2016 11:29:02 AM
Subject: Breaking: DMR Endorses Hillary Clinton in Democratic Presidential Primary

Friends - We wanted to share with you the following endorsement of Hillary Clinton's candidacy by the Des Moines Register that posted earlier this evening. Thanks!

DMR : Endorsement: Hillary Clinton has needed knowledge, experience

If there's one thing Democrats and Republicans agree on this year, it's the fact that the next president will face enormous challenges.

Domestically, this president must work with Congress in confronting the issues of immigration, health care, increased threats to national security, the disappearing middle class, the growing deficit, Social Security solvency, gun control, renewable energy, sentencing reform and more.

On the world stage, this president will have to work with foreign leaders in dealing with ISIS and other terrorists, climate change, the containment of nuclear threats posed in North Korea and Iran, the Russian incursions in Ukraine and foreign trade.

The presidency is not an entry-level position. Whoever is sworn into office next January must demonstrate not only a deep understanding of the issues facing America, but also possess the diplomatic skills that enable presidents to forge alliances to get things done.

By that measure, Democrats have one outstanding candidate deserving of their support: Hillary Clinton. No other candidate can match the depth or breadth of her knowledge and experience.

As first lady, she worked tirelessly on health care reform and, with bipartisan support, created the Children's Health Insurance Program that provides coverage for 8 million children.

As a senator, she reached across party lines and joined forces with conservatives, including Sen. Lindsey Graham and former House Speaker Newt Gingrich, to fight for job creation and universal health care.

ENDORSEMENT: Marco Rubio can chart new direction for GOP

NASH: Register faced tough decision in endorsements

RELATED:A history of Register caucus endorsements

As secretary of state, she helped secure international sanctions against Iran and redefined her job by expanding America's diplomatic agenda to include poverty, women's rights, the environment and other issues.

She is not a perfect candidate, as evidenced the way she has handled the furor over her private email server. In our endorsement of her 2008 campaign for president, we wrote that "when she makes a mistake, she should just say so." That appears to be a lesson she has yet to fully embrace.

Her changing stance on gay marriage, immigration and other issues has invited accusations that she is guided less by personal conviction than by political calculations. She refutes that, and argues persuasively that a willingness to change one's thinking on specific issues, while remaining true to what she calls "the same values and principles," is a virtue, one lacking in most politicians.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Over the course of two meetings, Clinton spent more than three hours with the editorial board, answering questions in a direct and forthright manner. She exhibited an impressive command of the issues, though we'd have liked to hear more from her on the debt and the future of Social Security. She was somewhat prickly and defensive when discussing her emails, but overall she was gracious, engaging and personable.

Her chief opponent for the nomination, Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont, has proven to be an honorable and formidable campaigner, and it's very likely that without him in the race, candidates in both parties wouldn't be discussing America's growing inequality in wealth and income.

Sanders has tapped into the public's anger and frustration with Washington, without demonizing government and resorting to the cheap demagoguery favored by Donald Trump and others. He has shown himself to be a man of courage and principle who has the ability to rally others to his cause.

Buy Photo

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton meets with the Des Moines Register editorial board Monday Jan 11, 2015, in Des Moines, Iowa. Rodney White/The Register

Buy Photo

Fullscreen

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Next Slide

But Sanders admits that virtually all of his plans for reform have no chance of being approved by a Congress that bears any resemblance to the current crop of federal lawmakers. This is why, he says, voters can't simply elect him president, but must instead spark a "political revolution."

Easier said than done. Congress has the largest Republican majority since the 71st Congress of 1929-31.

A successful Sanders presidency would hinge on his ability to remake Washington in his own image. It's almost inconceivable that such a transformation could take place, even with Democrats controlling both chambers of Congress.

As for Martin O'Malley, the data-driven, wonkish former Maryland governor who has gained little traction in the campaign so far, he seems better suited to a Cabinet-level job in a Clinton White House.

In the final analysis, Iowa Democrats will have to choose between the lofty idealism of Bernie Sanders and the down-to-earth pragmatism of Hillary Clinton. For some, this will be a choice of whether to vote with their hearts or their heads.

Clinton has demonstrated that she is a thoughtful, hardworking public servant who has earned the respect of leaders at home and abroad. She stands ready to take on the most demanding job in the world.

This endorsement is the opinion of The Des Moines Register's editorial board:

David Chivers, president and publisher

Amalie Nash, executive editor and vice president for news and engagement

Lynn Hicks, opinion editor

Clark Kauffman, editorial writer

Andie Dominick, editorial writer

Brian Smith, engagement editor

Sent from my iPhone

--

You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "HRCRapid" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to hrcrapid+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com .
To post to this group, send email to hrcrapid@googlegroups.com .
For more options, visit https://groups.google.com/d/optout .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Tony Podesta" <podesta@podesta.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 5/4/2015 8:52:46 AM
Subject: Fwd: Podesta in the News Today

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: Missi Tessier <tessier@PodestaGroup.onmicrosoft.com >
Date: May 4, 2015 at 5:51:12 PM GMT+2
To: Tony Podesta <podesta@podesta.com >, David Marin <DMarin@podestagroup.com >
Cc: Stephen Rademaker <srademaker@PodestaGroup.onmicrosoft.com >
Subject: RE: Podesta in the News Today

Yes you are correct. David and Steve may want to give additional justification, but all of us agree that it is not in anyone's interest to engage with or respond to purposefully inaccurate right wing bloggers as it will only result in additional rounds of stories that will do nothing to correct the record. Our internal digital analysis has shown that this story line has flatlined over the last several days and we do not believe that inducing another spike in the online discussion will be beneficial.

From: Tony Podesta
Sent: Monday, May 04, 2015 10:43 AM
To: Missi Tessier; David Marin
Cc: Stephen Rademaker
Subject: Fwd: Podesta in the News Today

Weren't the Russians already owners when we started
This implies we worked on cifius
Don't think we should let anything pass
Views

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: Gregory McGowan <gmcgowan@podestagroup.com >
Date: May 4, 2015 at 4:26:00 PM GMT+2
To: Everyone <PA-Everyone@podesta.com >
Subject: Podesta in the News Today

PODESTA IN THE NEWS: 05.04.2015

Note: numerous blogs are continuing to repost last week's DeSmog Blog article as well as the following Breitbart piece that was published over the weekend.

Clinton Guru Podesta' Brother Lobbied for Scandal-Ridden Uranium One
By: Ben Shapiro, Breitbart

Breitbart

May 1, 2015

Clinton Guru Podesta' Brother Lobbied for Scandal-Ridden Uranium One

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By: Ben Shapiro

If you love the team that put together the Clinton Foundation and all of its various corrupt dealings with foreign nations, you'll love the Hillary Clinton 2016 campaign. It now turns out that John Podesta, chair of Hillary's presidential campaign – and the same man who called the allegations of Peter Schweizer's Clinton Cash "conspiracy theories" – has a brother who runs a company, The Podesta Group, that lobbied the State Department on behalf of Uranium One while Hillary Clinton was Secretary of State and beyond.

Uranium One is, of course, the uranium firm that sent a "flow of cash" to the Clinton Foundation as the Russian government gained increasing ownership of the company; the State Department had to sign off on the Russians' encroachment into the American uranium market. The Clinton Foundation did disclose its relationship with Uranium One in Hillary's State Department disclosures. According to the Daily Caller, Uranium One "paid the Podesta Group $40,000 to lobby the State Department, the Senate, the National Park Service and the National Security Council for 'international mining projects,' according to a July 20, 2012 filing."

Hillary's relationship with John Podesta goes back to the first Clinton administration. During Bill Clinton's second term, Podesta acted as chief of staff. After leaving, he created the Center for American Progress, a Clinton-backed leftist think tank designed to forward the political goals of the Clintons. As the Christian Science Monitor reported when Podesta joined Hillary Clinton's campaign back in January:

Podesta is the guy people call on when the going gets tough: He served as Bill Clinton's chief of staff from 1998 to 2001, helping control a series of crises including Clinton's impeachment trial. The Obama administration brought him on to help the President steer a path through Congressional impasses and to avert embarrassments like the Affordable Care Act's botched rollout.

Podesta's relationship with the Clintons didn't waver during Hillary's time in the White House; his own ties with the Obama administration grew stronger when he became a senior advisor to the Obama administration in late 2013, before resigning this year to join Hillary's campaign.

Podesta isn't the only member of the Clinton team embroiled in Clinton Foundation corruption. Hillary's new top fundraiser is Dennis Cheng, the former chief development officer for the Clinton Foundation, which means he did all the fundraising for that organization. Cheng has not been asked any questions thus far about his relationship with the Clinton Foundation or the new Clinton 2016 campaign.

Just as President Obama magically transformed his campaign organization, Obama for America, into a political action group, Organizing for Action, to lobby for his preferred governmental policies, Hillary Clinton has transformed the Clinton Foundation and its constellation of allies into her 2016 campaign.

GREGORY MCGOWAN ASSOCIATE
O 202.448.5204 / C / W www.podestagroup.com
1001 G Street NW, Suite 1000 West, Washington, DC 20001

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Stephen Hadley" <stephenjhadley@mac.com>
To: "Ambassador Ronald Neumann" <rneumann@academyofdiplomacy.org>
Date: 1/16/2014 6:51:27 AM
Subject: Fwd: [friends-of-afghanistan-network] Hadley oped

Ron --

Nice to hear from you. And thanks for the kind remarks. Hope the White House is listening!

Stephen J. Hadley
(202) 220-5061

Begin forwarded message:

> From: Catherine Eng <eng@ricehadleygates.com >
> Date: January 16, 2014 at 10:31:26 AM EST
> To: Stephen Hadley <stephenjhadley@mac.com >
> Subject: Fwd: FW: [friends-of-afghanistan-network] Hadley oped
>
> Catherine Eng | Chief of Staff to Stephen J. Hadley | RiceHadleyGates LLC
> E-mail: eng@ricehadleygates.com
> Tel.: 202-220-5061
> Web: http://www.ricehadleygates.com
>
> This message contains information that may be confidential and/or privileged. If you are not the intended recipient, you may not read, copy, distribute, or use this information. If you have received this transmission in error, please notify the sender immediately and then delete this message.
>
> ---------- Forwarded message ----------
> From: Bursch, Hanne <hbursch@usip.org >
> Date: Thu, Jan 16, 2014 at 9:32 AM
> Subject: FW: [friends-of-afghanistan-network] Hadley oped
> To: "Catherine Eng (eng@ricehadleygates.com)" <eng@ricehadleygates.com >
>
> From: Ronald Neumann [mailto:rneumann@academyofdiplomacy.org]
> Sent: Wednesday, January 15, 2014 8:57 PM
> To: Hadley, Stephen
> Subject: Fwd: [friends-of-afghanistan-network] Hadley oped
>
> Steve,
>
> I just wanted to congratulate you on a superb editorial; clearly stated and right on every point. Our pressure is only convincing Karzai that he is correct that it is we who want bases for purposes besides Afghan policy. He is wrong but our pressure only reinforces his view and is thus counter productive. And as you say, we don't need to close on the agreement now. It would be a considerable convenience but it is not essential. Stating what we are prepared to do would be at least equally stabilizing.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Best wishes,

Ron

Ambassador Ronald E. Neumann (ret.)

President

American Academy of Diplomacy

1200 18th St. NW Suite 902

Washington DC 20036

Tel: 202-331-3722

Follow us: Twitter | Facebook

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: rachel reid <rachel.c.reid@gmail.com >
Date: Wed, Jan 15, 2014 at 8:13 PM
Subject: [friends-of-afghanistan-network] Hadley oped
To: friends-of-Afghanistan-network@googlegroups.com

FEATURE STORY

In Afghanistan, an alternate approach to a security pact

The Washington Post
By Stephen J. Hadley
January 15, 2014

U.S. officials are struggling again with Afghan President Hamid Karzai. After painful and prolonged negotiations, they concluded a draft bilateral security agreement last year that lays the foundation for leaving U.S military forces in Afghanistan after 2014. It is expected to involve 8,000 to 10,000 U.S. troops with counterterrorism, training and other responsibilities in support of Afghan forces.

Most U.S. experts on Afghanistan believe that such a residual force is critical if Afghan forces are to continue to professionalize. Only with such help will they have a reasonable chance of containing the Taliban and giving Afghan authorities the space to negotiate a political settlement that includes the Taliban. Some NATO forces would remain, but only if U.S. troops stay.

Most experts believe that without residual forces, the billions of dollars in financial support promised for Afghan security forces and for Afghanistan's economic development will not materialize. Few believe that any Afghan government would survive long without this assistance. So the stakes are high — for Afghanistan and for preserving the investment of lives and treasure that the United States and its coalition allies have made over the past 12 years.

Initially Karzai said he would sign the agreement after a loya jirga, a traditional congregation of Afghan leaders, approved the pact. The loya jirga approved the deal in November, but Karzai demanded further concessions: an end to counterterrorism raids into Afghan homes at night, active U.S. support for the peace process with the Taliban and non-interference in the April presidential election that will determine Karzai's successor. Lately, he has threatened to leave the matter to his successor.

U.S. officials have responded by pressuring Karzai directly and indirectly. They have set a succession of deadlines and said the agreement must be signed in "weeks, not months." So far, nothing has worked. U.S. officials need an alternative approach.

One option would be for President Obama to make a public statement praising Afghanistan's progress in assuming responsibility for its security; improving the education, health and well-being of its citizens; and preparing for the April election. To support that progress, Obama would say, he has directed U.S. forces to curtail all but essential night raids. He is committed to facilitating the peace process, he would note, and pledges full support for an election free from all outside influences.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

These statements would not represent a major U.S. policy change, but together they would offer Karzai a face-saver if he wishes to sign the security agreement.

Next, Obama could announce the number of troops that he is prepared to leave in Afghanistan post-2014 and direct the Pentagon to develop plans on that basis. He would call on our NATO allies to announce similar force commitments.

This step would go a long way toward reassuring Afghan presidential candidates, and the Afghan people, of the United States' post-2014 presence. The lack of such reassurance has become a source of serious instability, threatening the election and the morale of Afghan security forces. For similar reasons, Obama should resist any pressure to set a date for the termination of the post-2014 U.S. deployment.

Third, Obama could state that while he is willing to sign the bilateral security agreement with Karzai, he also is willing to sign it with the next Afghan president. U.S. officials should stop pressuring Karzai — or anyone else — for a signature before the April election. Such pressure only strengthens Karzai's hand, encourages further delay and makes the United States look desperate.

Obama should make clear that his commitment of troops is dependent on the bilateral security agreement being signed. But a signing by a new Afghan president would give more than enough time to complete the necessary U.S. military planning before year's end. Indeed, experts say that even without the deal, U.S. forces could remain in Afghanistan after 2014 under the existing status-of-forces agreement, though our allies would have to negotiate new agreements for their forces with the new Afghan government.

Washington Post-ABC News polling last month suggested that more than 60 percent of Americans believe the Afghan war was not worth fighting. But the same poll also found that 55 percent support leaving some U.S. forces for training and "anti-insurgency" operations. And lawmakers' public statements suggest that a post-2014 deployment would have bipartisan support in Congress.

Obama should avoid any suggestion that he might embrace a "zero option" and leave no U.S. troops in Afghanistan after 2014. Almost every Afghan expert believes that would destabilize Afghanistan, threaten the outcome of the election and risk the collapse of Afghan security forces. This would profoundly affect U.S. security interests. Afghanistan again would become a haven for terrorists — who, history shows, would attack U.S. interests and territory. Afghanistan would contribute to destabilizing a nuclear-armed Pakistan. And the Afghan people would forfeit the progress they have made, with our help, in building a more tolerant, inclusive, secure and prosperous society.

Afghanistan's presidential election is less than three months away. U.S. policy must not be based on frustration with Karzai's mercurial behavior but on ensuring the election of a legitimate successor to Karzai with whom the United States can sign a security agreement that is overwhelmingly in the interests of both countries.

--
You received this message because you are subscribed to the Google Groups "Friends of Afghanistan Network" group.
To unsubscribe from this group and stop receiving emails from it, send an email to friends-of-afghanistan-network+unsubscribe@googlegroups.com.
To post to this group, send email to friends-of-afghanistan-network@googlegroups.com .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Georgetown Law Media Relations" <GeorgetownLawMediaRelations@law.georgetown.edu>
To:	"Media Relations" <MediaRelations@law.georgetown.edu>
Date:	2/2/2015 11:53:34 AM
Subject:	G'town Law: The Moynihan Report: 50 Years Later 2/5

Georgetown Law hosts the Georgetown Journal of Law & Modern Critical Perspectives symposium: The Moynihan Report: 50 Years Later on Thursday, February 5, 2015, from 10:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m. on the 12th floor of the Gewirz Student Center, located on the Georgetown Law campus at 120 F Street, NW, Washington, D.C.

In 1965, the Department of Labor released a report titled, The Negro Family: The Case for National Action, authored by Assistant Secretary of Labor Daniel Patrick Moynihan, who later became a senator from New York. The report argued that the decline of nuclear families in the black community would lead to high levels of poverty and that combating poverty required strengthening families, especially black men.

Fifty years after the release of the controversial report, the Georgetown Journal of Law & Modern Critical Race Perspectives symposium will evaluate, through the lens of modern critical race theorists, if the same themes still plague the black community, enabling poverty to thrive, and if so, why. Panelists will discuss the shifting notion of "family" throughout the years, the education system, employment, and violence between minorities and law enforcement. This symposium will bring together leading scholars and practitioners that can help break down these overarching topics that are often discussed in relation to the black community.

Media interested in attending should email mediarelations@law.georgetown.edu.

More information is available here:

http://www.law.georgetown.edu/news/press-releases/the-moynihan-report-50-years-later.cfm

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Ryan Anderson" <ryaneanderson@gmail.com>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 6/16/2009 5:31:00 AM
Subject: [big campaign] Tom Andrews: Congress Should Vote No On War Funding Bill http://www.huffingtonpost.com/tom-andrews/congress-should-vote-no-o_b_216240.html

Congress Should Vote No On War Funding Bill

Tom Andrews
former Member of Congress, Maine
June 16, 2009

Today, the House of Representatives is scheduled to vote on yet another supplemental funding bill , this time providing nearly $80 billion to continue waging the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan (the total bill is now at $106 billion). And, just like they have done repeatedly in years past, progressive Members of Congress should vote against this funding and end our nation's descent into a disastrous quagmire in Afghanistan.

As I've noted before , the presence of foreign troops in Afghanistan unites our opponents within the country and region and makes cooperation by key regional players like Iran, Russia and China far less likely with the prospect of tens of thousands of US troops on their border. As for those with the most at stake - Afghan people - over 80% oppose an escalation of American troops in their country.

This is why 51 Members of Congress voted against the supplemental war funding when it first appeared before the House in May. They recognized that ending the war in Afghanistan is an essential part of improving our national security and stabilizing central Asia, and acted out of that conviction.

This past week, a number of progressive bloggers have been hard at work to encourage those same Members of Congress to again vote no when that funding reappears this afternoon. And, according to the citizen whip count kept by Jane Hamshire at FireDogLake, they're very close to keeping the 39 no votes needed to defeat that funding. After years of working and voting to end the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan, these Congressional progressives have a chance to do just that. The many reasons to end these wars have not changed, and so, too, neither should their vote to oppose the supplemental funding.

Members of Congress will soon have another opportunity to build pressure against the military escalation in Afghanistan by supporting a bill by Congressman Jim McGovern (D-MA) that demands that the administration establish what the president has publicly stated is needed in Afghanistan - a military exit strategy. McGovern plans to introduce his bill as a floor amendment to the House Armed Services Committee's Defense Authorization bill when it hits the floor next week.

But, first thing first - today Members of the House should be voting no on the supplemental.

The Win Without War coalition planned to announce a coordinated day of action today in support of Rep. McGovern's bill. With the last minute scheduling of today's vote on the Supplemental, however, that work is being delayed to avoid creating any confusion on Capitol Hill. I hope my former colleagues will join the growing list of co-sponsors of Rep. McGovern's bill. Today, however, their focus should be on opposing the supplemental funding for the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail dubois.sara@gmail.com with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Heather Samuelson" <hsamuelson@cdmillsGroup.com>
To: "Phil Barnett" <pbarnett@sb-atalaya.com>
Date: 10/18/2015 9:12:15 AM
Subject: Re: Friends & Allies TP's

Thanks Phil. Seven (based on list below) is what we put in her hearing book (along with summaries of those reports), and believe consistent with what campaign has said in past. I'm good with additional language on email too..

From: Phil Barnett
Sent: Saturday, October 17, 2015 11:18 PM
To: Heather Samuelson
Cc: Brian Fallon , Cheryl Mills , Milia Fisher , Jake Sullivan , John Podesta , Dan Schwerin , Adrienne Elrod , Mandy Grunwald , Philippe Reines , Sara Latham , David Kendall , Katherine Turner , Jennifer Palmieri , Huma Abedin, Phil Schiliro , Matt Siegler , Varun Anand , sbay@hillaryclinton.com , Corey Ciorciari

On Heather's point about getting a consistent number for the prior congressional investigations, here's the list we have in the fact sheet comparing the Benghazi investigations to prior investigations into terrorist attacks:

• In December 2012, the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Government Affairs released a report on the Benghazi attack.
• In April 2013, the Chairmen of the House Armed Services, House Foreign Affairs, House Judiciary, House Oversight and Gover nment Reform, and House Intelligence Committees released a report on the Benghazi attack.
• In September 2013, the majority and minority staffs of the House Oversight and Government Reform Committee released se parate reports on the Benghazi attack.
• In January 2014, the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence issued a report on the Benghazi attack.
• In February 2014, the House Armed Services Committee issued a majority staff report on the Benghazi attack.
• In February 2014, the House Foreign Affairs Committee issued a report on the Benghazi attack.
• In November 2014, the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence issued a report on the Benghazi attack.

This makes seven prior congressional investigations if you count (as we did) the report by the five Republican chairmen.

If we want to use seven as the number instead of six (which is the number in the talking points), it might make sense to rephrase the talking point so it is referring to prior congressional investigations, not prior committee investigations, since the five Republican chairmen are not technically a "committee."

One other point is that there is very little in the talking points about the emails. That may make sense, but if you want talking points for allies to use, here would be two possible ones to add:

* While Republicans criticize Secretary Clinton's email practices, Secretary Clinton has called for all of her emails to be released publicly. No prior cabinet secretary has ever taken this step. There are now thousands of her emails available to the public, more any other cabinet secretary in history. There are thousands of her emails available on the State Department's website; there are zero emails from any of her predecessors.

* Republicans and the press naturally focus on a small subset of her emails. But if you look at all of them, you will see a much different picture. You will see a Secretary working hard -- and long hours -- to reach a nuclear arms agreement with Russia, build an international coalition against Iran, advance women's rights, and aid countries in need.

Phil

On Sat, Oct 17, 2015 at 4:40 PM, Heather Samuelson <hsamuelson@cdmillsgroup.com > wrote:

> My edits and questions attached.
>
> From: Brian Fallon
> Sent: Saturday, October 17, 2015 1:49 PM
> To: Cheryl Mills
> Cc: Milia Fisher , Jake Sullivan , John Podesta , Dan Schwerin , Adrienne Elrod , Mandy Grunwald , Philippe Reines, Sara Latham , Heather Samuelson , David Kendall , Katherine Turner , Jennifer Palmieri , Huma Abedin, Phil Schiliro , Phil Barnett , Matt Siegler , Varun Anand , sbay@hillaryclinton.com , Corey Ciorciari

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Attached is an updated version of Friends and Allies TPs document to reflect the settled-upon goals/themes for the hearing. Please send along any edits/comments. We want to provide this to folks in time for the Sunday shows tomorrow.

On Fri, Oct 16, 2015 at 4:19 PM, Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com > wrote:

> Dear Team
>
> In advance of tomorrow's call, please find a summary that seeks to capture our discussion.
>
> Welcome comments and redline edits.
>
> best.
>
> cdm
>
> On Fri, Oct 16, 2015 at 2:01 PM, Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
>
>> Hi all-
>>
>> As discussed on today's call, we'll reconvene this hearing prep group on Saturday morning, 8:30-9:30 am. Calendar invite to follow.
>>
>> Dial in: 1 (718) 839-6957 // NO PIN
>>
>> Best,
>> Milia
>>
>> --
>> Milia Fisher
>> Special Assistant to the Chair
>> Hillary for America
>> mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
>> c: 858.395.1741

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To:	CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date:	12/6/2014 7:11:51 AM
Subject:	Correct The Record Saturday December 6, 2014 Roundup

Correct The Record Saturday December 6, 2014 Roundup:

Headlines:

FROM MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA: Media Matters for America: "Fox Tries To Shoot Down Latest Benghazi Report To Justify Select Committee Hearing"

"Fox News originally ignored a House GOP report debunking many of its Benghazi myths but is now attacking the report's credibility to promote the need for more Benghazi Select Committee hearings."

Politico: "Hillary Clinton sticks with President Obama on Israel"

[Subtitle:] "In appearance with a pro-Israel donor, she defends the White House on Iran talks."

Wall Street Journal: "Iran Talks Likely to Figure in Any Hillary Clinton 2016 Bid"

"Interviewed at the event by a political supporter, Haim Saban, Mrs. Clinton said the U.S. mustn't be overly willing to reach a deal with Iran. 'I remain strongly of the view that no deal is better than a bad deal,' she said. Still, she said the negotiations are an important step."

Waterloo-Cedar Falls Courier: "Harkin: Clinton shouldn't take Iowa for granted"

"The Iowa Democrat, who believes it's a 50-50 proposition whether the former first lady, U.S. senator and secretary of state seeks the nomination, said that if Clinton runs she won't have the field to herself."

Washington Post blog: PostPartisan: Ed Rogers: "The Insiders: Who is Hillary kidding?"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Is Clinton really trying to seem reluctant, to position herself as the candidate who doesn't really want to run but will sacrifice herself for the good of our country? Please."

CNN opinion: Gloria Berger: "Hillary and Jeb: How the deciders decide"

"Lost amidst the predictable clutter of the 'will-he-or won't-she' questions about whether Jeb Bush or Hillary Clinton will actually run for the presidency is an unexpected development: a hint of authenticity."

U.S. News & World Report blog: The Run 2016: "Warren Liberals Eye Webb to Pressure Hillary"

"The Progressive Change Campaign Committee has deployed one of its top organizers to the early primary state of New Hampshire to ask elected officials and political leaders there to pressure all candidates to take stands on Warren's agenda – one that includes expanding Social Security benefits, reforming the way Wall Street banks operate and making college more affordable."

New York Times: "Hillary Clinton's History as First Lady: Powerful, but Not Always Deft"

"These were formative years for Mrs. Clinton, a time of daring and hubris, a time when she evolved from that headstrong young lawyer so impressed with the man she would marry into a political figure in her own right."

Yahoo: "Is it already too late for a Democrat to derail Hillary Clinton in 2016?"

"The bottom line is that Obama didn't 'come out of nowhere' in 2008 — but in 2016, Webb, Sanders and O'Malley would have to. So far, only Warren is on the map."

Articles:

FROM MEDIA MATTERS FOR AMERICA: Media Matters for America: "Fox Tries To Shoot Down Latest Benghazi Report To Justify Select Committee Hearing"

By Ellie Sandmeyer

December 5, 2014, 4:59 p.m. EST

Fox News originally ignored a House GOPreport debunking many of its Benghazi myths but is now attacking the report's credibility to promote the need for more Benghazi Select Committee hearings.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In November, the House Intelligence Committee, chaired by Republicans, released the results of a lengthy investigation that "debunk[ed] a series of persistent allegations" perpetuated by conservative media outlets about the events and culpability surrounding the 2012 attacks on U.S. diplomatic facilities in Benghazi, Libya. The report reaffirmed the findings of several previous investigations and once again determined that "there was no intelligence failure, no delay in sending a CIA rescue team, no missed opportunity for a military rescue, and no evidence the CIA was covertly shipping arms from Libya to Syria."

Fox News remained mostly silent in the wake of the report's publication, giving the report only cursory coverage while flagship news program Fox News Sunday ignored it entirely. The network's lack of coverage earned condemnation from CNN media critic Brian Stelter and even Fox's own media analyst, Howard Kurtz. The absence of coverage stood in stark contrast toFox's exhaustive focus on the formation of a select committee to investigate Benghazi in June, when the network devoted at least 225 segments to the select committee over a mere two-week span.

With another Benghazi Select Committee hearing scheduled for December 10, Fox has changed its approach from silence to overt attempts to undermine the GOP report's credibility.

Bret Baier, host of Fox's Special Report, claimed on December 3 that "many" believe the House Intelligence Committee's Benghazi report "went soft on the Obama administration and was filled inaccuracies" and emphasized the further investigation by the Benghazi Select Committee. To bolster this allegation, investigative reporter Catherine Herridge noted the "eyewitness accounts" of Kris Paronto and John Tiegen, who, according to Herridge, "say there was an intelligence failure. They were directly warned in late August a strike was likely, yet no Defense Department assets were available on the September 11th anniversary."

Special Report's December 3 panel went to further lengths to undermine the Intelligence Committee report as Baier, Fox News contributor Charles Krauthammer, The Weekly Standard's Steve Hayes, and The Hill's A. B. Stoddard suggested that the investigation was insufficient.

But Fox's latest attempts at subverting the committee report amount to nothing more than highlighting a smattering of Republican lawmakers who claim to remember events occurring differently than they were laid out in the final report. In a December 5 article for FoxNews.com, Herridge reported that newly declassified testimony contained the statements of members of Congress recalling that former CIA director David Petraeus connected the Benghazi attack to the protests against an anti-Muslim YouTube video in an off-the-record coffee meeting two days after the attack:

“If the lawmakers' recollection is accurate, that means Petraeus' brief on Sept. 14, 2012, was instead in line with the White House, and then-Secretary Hillary Clinton's State Department. It was a State Department press release at 10:07 p.m. ET, before the attack was even over, that first made the link to the obscure anti-Islam video. The newly declassified testimony says $70,000 was spent on advertising in Pakistan, denouncing the anti-Muslim film.

“During this testimony, GOP Rep. Jeff Miller questioned Petraeus' original testimony, stating the former CIA director ‘even went so far as to say that it had been put into Arabic language and then was put on this TV station, this cleric's TV station. I mean, [Petraeus] drove that in pretty hard when he was in here. ‘

“Rep. Michele Bachmann, R-Minn., added ‘it was said in here a little bit earlier that the CIA never said Benghazi was part of a Cairo protest and of the video. And we were given just the opposite message by the Director of the CIA on the [September] 14th [2012.]’

“Rogers noted there was no transcript for the brief, only staff notes, but after the Petraeus incident in September 2012, the practice was changed to always run a transcript on the briefings. The Sept. 14, 2012, brief was a coffee meeting with members.”

USA Today reported that the Fox-promoted Select Committee may cost $1.5 million this year, despite numerous other independent investigations finding no wrongdoing with relation to the events in Benghazi.

Politico: “Hillary Clinton sticks with President Obama on Israel”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Katie Glueck

December 5, 2014, 10:13 p.m. EST

[Subtitle:] In appearance with a pro-Israel donor, she defends the White House on Iran talks.

Hillary Clinton had several opportunities to distance herself from the Obama administration during an appearance Friday before a heavily pro-Israel crowd, but she didn't take them.

Instead, she defended President Barack Obama's dealings with the Jewish state at a time of tense U.S.-Israel relations, insisting the White House is committed to Israel's security and supporting America's nuclear talks with Iran.

The former secretary of state and likely 2016 Democratic presidential contender was speaking at the Saban Forum, an event hosted by the Brookings Institution and named for billionaire and Democratic mega-donor Haim Saban. She offered her most extensive Israel-related comments since criticizing the president's foreign policy in a summer interview with The Atlantic that caused a political maelstrom.

Ahead of her remarks, some attendees chattered over cocktails about their disagreements with the White House, especially on its decision to pursue the negotiations with Tehran. But, during a half-hour conversation onstage with Saban, Clinton signaled little daylight with the administration.

"If you look at the close cooperation, and what this administration and the Congress over the last six years has done with respect to Israel's security, it's quite extraordinary," she said, pointing to funding for military equipment and strategic consultations. "Nobody can argue with the commitment of this administration to Israel's security, and that has to continue, it has to deepen regardless of the political back-and-forth."

Clinton has yet to say if whether she will launch a second campaign for president — an announcement is expected early next year — but Republicans already have been scrutinizing her tenure at Foggy Bottom during Obama's first term. Many in the GOP accuse Obama of being insufficiently supportive of Israel, and some have tried to link Clinton to Obama's foreign policy missteps.

In the interview with The Atlantic, published in August, Clinton questioned the White House's self-described foreign policy doctrine of "Don't do stupid sh—," as well as its approach to the bloodshed in Syria, among other criticisms. Her remarks prompted blowback from people close to the administration. Some were unhappy with the timing of her comments, which came as the president faced a slew of international crises. Clinton eventually called the president to patch things over.

Had she decided Friday to issue more criticisms, she could have risked another flurry of anger, especially amid the White House's efforts to keep the talks with Iran on track. World powers, including the United States, have extended the negotiations with the Islamic Republic until the summer.

Israel views a nuclear weapon-armed Iran as an existential threat, and it doesn't believe Iran's assurances that its nuclear program is peaceful.

As secretary of state, Clinton was deeply involved in laying the groundwork for the negotiations (she credited sanctions as helping bring the Iranians to the table). On Friday, she sought to reassure the crowd that "no deal is better than a bad deal," and that "all options" must remain "on the table" in preventing Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon.

But, in at times hawkish language, she defended the path the White House has taken with Tehran so far, even as she also painted Iran as a deeply destabilizing force in the Middle East. She also indicated support for the extension of talks, saying it's "very important" to "try to see if we can reach an agreement in line with our requirements."

"My bottom line is a deal that verifiably closes all of Iran's pathways to nuclear weapons," she said. "The key there is 'verifiably' and 'all.'"

Clinton was also asked about Benjamin Netanyahu, the conservative prime minister of Israel, with whom Obama has a particularly fraught relationship. In The Atlantic, Clinton offered sympathetic words for Netanyahu, but on Friday, she avoided that, instead downplaying Israel's disagreements with the administration.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"At times there are going to be differences," she said. "And I don't think it's personal. I think it is a different perspective about, sometimes what we think is best for our friends may not be what our friends think is best for them. When we say that, I don't believe that's disrespectful or rupturing the relationship. I think that's an honest relationship. That's the kind of friend I want. I want people to say that to me, I want to be able to say that back. I think that's a broader, more accurate way to look at the relationship right now."

She also reiterated her support for a two-state solution to resolve the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, noting that goal was pursued when her husband, Bill Clinton, was president, as well as in the Bush and Obama administrations.

The absence of negotiations "leaves a vacuum that gets filled by…bad actors, threats…[that are] not good for Israel and not good for the Palestinians," she said. "So I think the efforts undertaken in the last several years, when I was secretary [and under] Secretary [John] Kerry are very much in the interests of Israel and in the interests of the Palestinians."

Asked about her biggest regrets while at the State Department, Clinton named several, including the administration's decision not to do more to boost the pro-democracy protests in Iran in 2009, something she discussed in her recent memoir, "Hard Choices."

The event drew lawmakers and former lawmakers, including House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.), Rep. Nita Lowey (D-N.Y.), whose district includes the Clintons' Chappaqua home; Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.), former Sen. Joe Lieberman (I-Conn.) and former Rep. Jane Harman (D-Calif.), along with former Israeli Amb. Michael Oren, among others.

Clinton lingered after the event, hugging Lowey, greeting old colleagues from the State Department, taking pictures with Oren and huddling with Graham.

Wall Street Journal: "Iran Talks Likely to Figure in Any Hillary Clinton 2016 Bid"

By Jay Solomon and Peter Nicholas

December 5, 2014, 7:39 p.m. EST

[Subtitle:] Former Diplomat Remains Tied to Administration Efforts to Seal Nuclear Deal; GOP Says Tehran Uses the Talks as Cover

WASHINGTON— Hillary Clinton has distanced herself from the Obama administration's increasingly unpopular handling of international issues, including Syria and Russia.

The former secretary of state is much more closely tied to current U.S. diplomatic efforts toward Iran aimed at curbing Tehran's nuclear program. Mrs. Clinton has taken credit for initiating secret talks with Iran in 2012 that formed the foundation for negotiations that were recently extended another seven months. In addition, one of her closest foreign-policy advisers at the State Department, Jake Sullivan, remains one of the Obama administration's top negotiators with the Iranian diplomats.

Republicans are already citing Iran as a likely top foreign-policy issue in the 2016 campaign, when Mrs. Clinton is expected to be the front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination. They say the White House is allowing Tehran to use the talks as a cover to weaken Western sanctions and to advance its nuclear program. The White House has said its diplomacy, and an interim agreement reached last year, have capped key parts of Iran's nuclear program and rolled it back in some areas.

In a July CNN interview, Mrs. Clinton pushed for a U.S. negotiating line that would allow Iran to maintain little to no ability to produce nuclear fuel in the near term. But U.S. diplomats have already conceded in talks that Tehran would maintain thousands of centrifuges used to enrich uranium as part of any final deal.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

She spoke about the Iran nuclear talks at an event Friday night hosted by the Brookings Institution think tank, saying she supported the extension of nuclear negotiations with Iran. But she displayed distance from the White House's policies on Iran. She said she wished the Obama administration "had spoken out more" to support a pro-democracy movement that broke out in Iran in 2009. "You never know...what you may say that gives heart to people."

Interviewed at the event by a political supporter, Haim Saban, Mrs. Clinton said the U.S. mustn't be overly willing to reach a deal with Iran. "I remain strongly of the view that no deal is better than a bad deal," she said.

Still, she said the negotiations are an important step. "I think it is a very important effort to continue to pursue, and to try to see if we can reach an agreement that is in line with our requirements."

Despite her apparent differences with the negotiators, Republicans say she is locked into the Obama administration's policy because of her role in shaping it. Rep. Steve Chabot (R., Ohio), a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said she was the "chief architect" of the Obama foreign policy for four years and will have to answer for any failings when it comes to Iran. "For the most part, the current secretary of state has carried on the policies that she started," he said. "There hasn't been a tremendous difference between the two relative to Iran."

Mrs. Clinton, through her office, declined to comment for this article.

During her 2008 presidential bid, Mrs. Clinton occasionally roiled the Democratic contest with hawkish statements about Iran, at one point slamming then-Sen. Barack Obama's call for direct talks as "naive."

On joining Mr. Obama's administration, she expressed greater skepticism than did Mr. Obama toward engaging Iran. Weeks after moving to the State Department, she told the foreign minister of the United Arab Emirates she was "doubtful" Tehran would respond to U.S. offers to hold talks over its nuclear program, according to senior U.S. officials, a comment seen as a slap at the White House.

Still, Mrs. Clinton moved aggressively to implement Mr. Obama's strategy, offering the prospect of talks while boosting economic pressure on Tehran.

Her supporters and some foreign-policy experts say she will be able to argue that her efforts to impose sanctions were the primary reason Tehran agreed to hold direct, high-level talks.

"She was one of the foremost Iran skeptics, and by taking a tough line…she also teed up the kind of leverage that might lead to an agreement, should there be one," said the author David Rothkopf, who recently published a book on the Obama administration's foreign policy.

At the same time, Mrs. Clinton was intimately involved in establishing the diplomatic channel that laid the groundwork for today's nuclear negotiations, said current and former U.S. officials.

In the summer of 2012, Mrs. Clinton secretly dispatched Mr. Sullivan, then her deputy chief of staff, to the Omani capital, Muscat, to meet senior Iranian diplomats. Not even Mr. Sullivan's colleagues were told of his mission.

"For the delicate first meeting with the Iranians, Jake was not the most experienced diplomat at the State Department I could have chosen, but he was discreet and had my absolute confidence," Mrs. Clinton wrote in her new book, "Hard Choices." "His presence would send a powerful message that I was personally invested in this process."

Mr. Sullivan went on to become one of the Obama administration's top nuclear negotiators with Iran, remaining in that role after Mrs. Clinton left the State Department in early 2013.

The 38-year-old is widely expected to be in line for a senior position in a Clinton administration. Mr. Sullivan's departure this summer as a foreign-policy aide to Vice President Joe Biden was seen as a prelude to his transition into advising the former first lady's presidential bid.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Unlike others in the Obama administration who will be long gone in 2017, he will own this deal if Hillary Clinton becomes president," said Mark Dubowitz of the Foundation for Defense of Democracies, a Washington think tank that has criticized the U.S. negotiating strategy with Iran. "The pressure on him to do a good deal is enormous."

Mr. Sullivan is currently teaching at Yale University but has continued on as part of the U.S. negotiating team with Iran. In meetings with Republican skeptics of the Iran talks, he has mirrored Mrs. Clinton's more hawkish line, according to participants in some of the meetings.

People close to Mrs. Clinton say she will likely approach Iran from two perspectives during a campaign. If there is a deal, she can point to her role and that of Mr. Sullivan in establishing the diplomatic channel to Tehran. If it fails, she will argue she was always skeptical about the chances of success.

Waterloo-Cedar Falls Courier: "Harkin: Clinton shouldn't take Iowa for granted"

By James Lynch

December 6, 2014

JOHNSTON | Whether she asks for it or not, Sen. Tom Harkin has some advice for Hillary Clinton if she decides to run for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2016.

First off, Clinton, who finished third in Iowa's first-in-the-nation precinct caucuses in 2008, has to understand that she is going to have to work for Iowans' support.

"She needs to understand that she can't take it for granted," Harkin said Friday during taping of Iowa Public Television's Iowa Press, which airs tonight at 7:30.

The Iowa Democrat, who believes it's a 50-50 proposition whether the former first lady, U.S. senator and secretary of state seeks the nomination, said that if Clinton runs she won't have the field to herself.

Former Virginia Sen. Jim Webb is forming an exploratory committee and Vermont Independent Sen. Bernie Sanders will be back in Iowa later this month giving him four visit – the same as outgoing Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley, who spoke at the Iowa Hall of Fame Dinner honoring Harkin, who is retiring after 40 years in Congress.

Harkin didn't endorse Clinton, who he hosted at his annual steak fry in September, or any of the others, but spoke highly of O'Malley.

"I like him a lot. I admire him greatly," Harkin said.

If she runs, Harkin said, Clinton should take her campaign to small-town Iowa rather than concentrate on larger media markets.

"Don't just go to Des Moines or Waterloo or Cedar Rapids or Dubuque," he said. "Go to the rural areas. Start out in smaller communities in Iowa. Let them know you care about rural America and small towns and communities.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"You can get the cities later on, but plant your flag in rural Iowa," he said.

Harkin also said he will remain active in the Iowa Democratic Party, but not in a leadership role.

"I am a Democrat and I love my party and I want my party to be good and I want them to have good policies and good candidates," he said. "But I don't intend to be any kind of godfather or something like that. I just want to be supportive and helping in whatever way I can."

He was reluctant to arm-chair quarterback the unsuccessful Senate campaign by Bruce Braley.

"He's been a great congressman, he has contributed a lot and I thought he ran a good campaign," Harkin said.

The Braley campaign made a couple of mistakes – "We all know about that," he said, and Republican state Sen. Joni Ernst ran a "great campaign." In the end, however, but the four-term 1st District representative was the victim of a wave election.

"I've seen waves," Harkin said. "I came in on a wave in 1974, the Watergate wave. And so I've seen these waves move back and forth. And this was just one of those years."

Asked whether Braley should run again, Harkin said that will be a personal decision for the Waterloo attorney to make.

"I think he is a good public servant. He was a very, very good congressman. He worked very hard," Harkin said. "If he wants to run again, I would think there would be a lot of support for him."

Iowa Press can be seen at 7:30 p.m. tonight and noon Sunday on IPTV, at 8:30 a.m. Saturday on IPTV World and is available beginning tonight at www.IPTV.org.

Washington Post blog: PostPartisan: Ed Rogers: "The Insiders: Who is Hillary kidding?"

By Ed Rogers

December 5, 2014, 6:33 p.m. EST

Choosing to run for president means understanding everything the job entails – both the good and the bad – and deciding you are up for the adventure. By some accounts, Hillary Clinton is "genuinely undecided" about whether to run, but while we wait for her formal decision, she seems to be posing a little too hard. At the Massachusetts Conference for Women in Boston yesterday, she repeatedly emphasized how "unforgiving" and "hard" being president was, saying in part, "Here's what I worry about. The stress on anybody in a leadership position, multiplied many times over to be president. The incoming never ends."

I'm a little skeptical. Is Clinton really trying to seem reluctant, to position herself as the candidate who doesn't really want to run but will sacrifice herself for the good of our country? Please. That is rich, especially considering the source. It's not quite as tone-deaf as saying she and Bill were "dead broke," but her act certainly strains credibility in suggesting she is wary of the burdens of the presidency.

I do think there are some leaders who have been in close proximity to the presidency who don't crave the White House the way others do. Hillary Clinton could be in that category (as could Jeb Bush), but nothing about her actions to date suggest anything other than that she is already running.

Nobody craves power and the presidency like the Clintons. Why pretend otherwise? It's not bad to be ambitious and want to be president. Many have been angling for the job for years. Few who have ever been elected president have wanted to leave the office. Stop the woe-is-me anguish and don't give us the phony martyr routine. Anyone who runs for president must avoid talking down to voters and acting like they are reluctantly willing to take on the "toughest job."

To be fair, this is not unique to Secretary Clinton. We will hear more false modesty from preening wannabes. I hope the handlers and 2016 candidates will have the discipline to spare us the theatrics. If the office really is just too much to bear, then save us the drama and do something else.

CNN opinion: Gloria Berger: "Hillary and Jeb: How the deciders decide"

By Gloria Borger

December 5, 2014, 3:45 p.m. EST

Lost amidst the predictable clutter of the "will-he-or won't-she" questions about whether Jeb Bush or Hillary Clinton will actually run for the presidency is an unexpected development: a hint of authenticity.

Turns out that political purgatory—even if temporary—can actually spark a genuine conversation with the public about what it takes to be president, and what goes into deciding whether you want to run.

Here's Hillary on herself: "The job is unforgiving in many ways, so I think you need people around you who will kid you, make fun of you. ... You can lose touch with what's real, what's authentic."

Here's Jeb on his decision: "Can I do it where the sacrifice to my family is tolerable?...It's a pretty ugly business right now. There's a level under which I would never subjugate my family because that's my organizing principle. That's my life."

So while Chris Christie won't answer questions about immigration and Ted Cruz is threatening to block presidential nominations and Rand Paul is blaming the tragic Eric Garner death on cigarette taxes, there's another more personal and revealing conversation going on about the presidency and how to get there, and we ought to pay some attention.

Not just because it's coming from Jeb Bush and Hillary Clinton, although that is a part of it. After all, Hillary's outside support network is up and running, even if she isn't officially yet. And while Jeb has no campaign infrastructure or organization, his closest advisers are having enough meetings with enough operatives to send enough signals that it's a very live, real, even likely, possibility. Though Jeb's advisers tell me he hasn't made a decision, the process over the last six months sure looks like it leads to a presidential campaign.

So all the cheerleaders need is the final hand signal.

Which brings us back to the Jeb and Hillary conversations. They're thinking out loud, in a way, which hardly ever happens in politics anymore because it usually gets you into trouble. (See: Joe Biden.)

But they're both doing it because their decisions about running for the presidency come from places of deep family experience. Hillary lived in the White House. Jeb visited his brother and his father there. They get it -- at all levels. They understand the power and nature of the job. They also understand the "what-it-takes" component to run for it.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

And, in a way, they've both got similar problems: They're each practiced politicians, but they're not the best transactional pols in their families. They each have problems with their party's activist base. And they both can seem like old news. It's that dynasty thing.

But wait. Maybe all that stuff actually prepares a candidate for the campaign, and maybe even for the job itself. Clinton's ruminations about decision-making, for instance, are refreshing.

"Technology connects you around the world instantaneously, so you're constantly being asked for opinions, to make decisions that maybe you need some time to think about," she told a Boston audience on Thursday.

"Maybe you need some time to sleep on it. Maybe you need to bring in some people to talk about it. But the pace of demands is so intense that you feel like you've got to respond." It's the stress, she said. "Here's what I worry about. The stress on anybody in a leadership position, multiplied many times over to be president. The incoming never ends."

It's a much more honest assessment than talking about the tug of being a grandmother.

As for Jeb Bush, in addition to the personal issues, he's given a big hint he gets that he's not aligned with the base of his party in some states—and that's fine. In a recent appearance before a Wall Street Journal CEO conference, he said the GOPnominee needs to be willing to "lose the primary to win the general (election) without violating your principles."

Could he possibly be talking about Mitt Romney circa 2012? Or his own problems with the party base on immigration and school reform? My guess: Both.

I'm also guessing this: What we are hearing from both of these politicians are part of the larger conversation they're having with themselves. As in: Do I need this? Can I do this? Is it worth it to me—and important enough to the country—for me to spend two years on this?

These are not wannabes. They've been there, in the heat, in one way or another. So while the subordinates plan, organize and recruit, the actual deciders continue to decide.

It's getting down to the wire, and they know it. You can hear it. And it may be the most genuine stuff we hear for the next two years.

U.S. News & World Report blog: The Run 2016: "Warren Liberals Eye Webb to Pressure Hillary"

By David Catanese

December 5, 2014, 3:37 p.m. EST

[Subtitle:] "There's a movement in New Hampshire to pump the breaks on a Clinton coronation."

Even if Elizabeth Warren isn't running for president, her liberal allies are determined to place the Massachusetts senator's vision at the fulcrum of the Democratic Party's 2016 primary debate.

The Progressive Change Campaign Committee has deployed one of its top organizers to the early primary state of New Hampshire to ask elected officials and political leaders there to pressure all candidates to take stands on Warren's agenda – one that includes expanding Social Security benefits, reforming the way Wall Street banks operate and making college more affordable.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“We’re trying to assess who is in and who is out in our strategy to exert pressure to get all Democratic candidates for president to embrace Elizabeth Warren-style ideas," says Adam Green, the committee's co-founder. Green would not comment on the success so far of the project, which the group began this week.

The goal of the campaign is to slow the coalescing of support around Hillary Clinton, who is an overwhelming front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination. But the movement might only have impact if there's another candidate willing to stake out positions to Clinton's left.

The only major candidate formally exploring the race with a committee to date is former Sen. Jim Webb, D-Va., who has been reluctant to draw any contrasts with Clinton.

Liberals are taking a wait-and-see approach to Webb, who is difficult to pin down ideologically.

"It seems like he may have a populist bent, but he's been out of the Senate for a while," Green says.

But Green posits that Webb could quickly make a mark on the race if he were forced to be pinned down on Warren's pet issues.

“If Jim Webb went to New Hampshire and local allies asked him if he supports breaking up the big banks and he says, 'Yes,' people will want to know if Hillary agrees, even people predisposed to supporting Hillary. That’s part of the process," he says.

Webb has made one visit to the Granite State since 2013, and it's unclear if he's heading back anytime soon.

The chairman of the New Hampshire Democratic Party, Ray Buckley, tells U.S. News he hasn't spoken to Webb or anyone connected to him since 2007.

New York Times: “Hillary Clinton’s History as First Lady: Powerful, but Not Always Deft”

By Peter Baker and Amy Chozick

December 5, 2014

WASHINGTON — As a young lawyer for the Watergate committee in the 1970s, Hillary Rodham caught a ride home one night with her boss, Bernard Nussbaum. Sitting in the car before going inside, she told him she wanted to introduce him to her boyfriend. “Bernie,” she said, “he’s going to be president of the United States.”

Mr. Nussbaum, stressed by the pressure of that tumultuous period, blew up at her audacious naïveté. “Hillary, that’s the most idiotic” thing, he screamed. She screamed back. “You don’t know a goddamn thing you’re talking about!” she said, and then called him a curse word. “God, she started bawling me out,” he recalled. “She walks out and slammed the door on me, and she storms into the building.”

It turned out she was right and he was wrong. Ms. Rodham, who later married that ambitious boyfriend, Bill Clinton, believed even then that life would take her to the White House and now may seek to return not as a spouse and partner, but on her own terms.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

In recent months, as Mrs. Clinton has prepared for a likely 2016 presidential campaign, she has often framed those White House years as a period when, like many working mothers, she juggled the demands of raising a young daughter and having a career. She talks about championing women's rights globally, supporting her husband during years of robust economic growth, and finding inspiration in Eleanor Roosevelt to stay resolute in the midst of personal attacks.

What Mrs. Clinton leaves out about her time as first lady is her messy, sometimes explosive and often politically clumsy dealings with congressional Republicans and White House aides. Now, the release of roughly 6,000 pages of extraordinarily candid interviews with more than 60 veterans of the Clinton administration paints a more nuanced portrait of a first lady who was at once formidable and not always politically deft.

Her triumphs and setbacks are laid bare in the oral histories of Mr. Clinton's presidency, released last month by the Miller Center at the University of Virginia. The center has conducted oral histories of every presidency going back to Jimmy Carter's, interviewing key players and then sealing them for years to come. But more than any other, this set of interviews bears on the future as much as the past.

These were formative years for Mrs. Clinton, a time of daring and hubris, a time when she evolved from that headstrong young lawyer so impressed with the man she would marry into a political figure in her own right. She emerged from battles over health care and Whitewater a more seasoned yet profoundly scarred and cautious politician with a better grasp of how Washington works, but far more wary of ambitious projects that may be unpopular.

Now carefully controlled at 67, then she was fiery and unpredictable, lobbing sarcastic jabs in private meetings and congressional hearings. Now criticized as a centrist and challenged from the left, Mrs. Clinton then was considered the liberal whispering in her husband's ear to resist the North American Free Trade Agreement and a welfare overhaul.

"She's much more politically astute now than she was in early 1993," said Alan Blinder, who was a White House economist. "I think she learned. She's really smart. She learns, and she knows she made mistakes."

An Independent Force

No president ever had a partner quite like Hillary Rodham Clinton. She attended campaign strategy meetings in Little Rock, Ark., and later became the first (and so far only) first lady with an office in the West Wing. She would bring his meandering meetings to a close. She plotted out his defense against scandal.

"The thing he lacks is discipline, both in his personal life and his intellectual or decision-making life, unless he's rescued by somebody," observed Alice M. Rivlin, who served as White House budget director. "I think for a good part of his career, he was probably rescued by Hillary by her being a more decisive, more disciplined kind of person who kept things moving."

She was an independent force within the White House, single-handedly pushing health care onto the agenda and intimidating into silence those who thought she might be mishandling it. She was prone to bouts of anger and nursed deep resentment toward Washington. She endured a terribly complicated relationship with her philandering husband. And yet she was the one who often channeled his energies, steered him toward success and saved him from himself.

"She may have been critical from time to time with temper tantrums and things like that," said Mr. Nussbaum, who went on to become Mr. Clinton's first White House counsel. "But she was very strong, and he needed her desperately. He would not have been president, I don't think, without her."

Mrs. Clinton created her own team in the White House that came to be called Hillaryland, and "they were a little island unto themselves," as Betty Currie, the president's secretary, put it. She inspired more loyalty from them than the president did from his own team, said Roger Altman, who was deputy treasury secretary, probably because she was not as purely political. "She wears her heart on her sleeve much more than he does," he said.

But the Clintons were fiercely protective of each other, acting at times as if it were just them against the world. "I remember one time in one of these meetings where she was blowing up about his staff and how we were all incompetent and he was having to be the mechanic and drive the car and do everything — that we weren't capable of anything, why did he have to do it all himself," said Joan N. Baggett, an assistant for political affairs.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Mr. Clinton had a similar temper when it came to the arrows hurled at her, and aides learned early on never to question her judgment in front of him. “He really reacts violently when people criticize Hillary,” said Mickey Kantor, the 1992 campaign chairman and later commerce secretary. “I mean he really gets angry — you can just see it. He literally gets red in the face.”

He depended on her more than any other figure in his world. It blinded him to trouble, some advisers concluded, most notably about her ill-fated drive to remake the health care system.

But he rarely overruled her, at least not in ways that staff members could detect. “I can’t think of any issue of any importance at all where they were in disagreement and she didn’t win out,” recalled Abner Mikva, who served as White House counsel.

Finding a Balance

Despite her boast to Mr. Nussbaum, Mrs. Clinton was unsentimental in her calculations about whether her husband was ready to run for president. As governor of Arkansas, Mr. Clinton evaluated a candidacy in 1988, when he would turn 42, and thought it might be in his interest even if he lost. Mrs. Clinton disagreed. “You run to win or you don’t at all,” Mr. Kantor remembered her saying a couple of years later.

Her assessment was that 1988 was not his year. “I think she felt he wasn’t ready,” said Frank Greer, a media strategist.

There may have been other reasons, too. Mr. Clinton complained to his friend Peter Edelman that Senator Al Gore of Tennessee, who was mounting his own campaign for the Democratic nomination in 1988, was “spreading rumors that he was having extramarital affairs.”

Others had also heard reports. After meeting Mr. Clinton, Ms. Rivlin gushed about him to their mutual friend, Donna Shalala. Ms. Shalala agreed that Mr. Clinton was “terrific,” but added that “he’s never going to be president of the United States.” Ms. Rivlin asked why not. “He’s got a woman problem,” Ms. Rivlin remembered her answering.

By 1992, Mrs. Clinton was convinced that he was ready, and she confronted the “woman problem” directly in strategy sessions. “We had one meeting that was solely on this subject at which Hillary was present,” said Stanley B. Greenberg, their pollster. “It was an uncomfortable meeting, I can assure you, raising the issue,” he added. “I remember Hillary saying that, ‘Obviously, if I could say no to this question, we would say no, and therefore there is an issue.’ She spoke about this as much as he did.”

But if Mr. Clinton’s dalliances were a challenge, some of his aides worried that so was his wife. Some questioned whether he would look emasculated to have such a strong spouse. “They pigeonholed her,” said Susan Thomases, a close friend of Mrs. Clinton’s who worked on the campaign. “She was so strong a personality that there were people who felt that when they were together her strong personality made him seem weaker.”

Mrs. Clinton struggled with that, trying to find a balance. But she was integral to nearly every decision — from her husband’s ideological positioning down to his campaign song. “Every time we suggest something, Hillary vetoes it, and we just can’t get a song,” Mr. Clinton’s longtime consigliere, Bruce R. Lindsey, complained at one point, according to Al From, founder of the centrist Democratic Leadership Council. Finally, Mr. From suggested Fleetwood Mac’s “Don’t Stop,” and that passed muster.

More important, Mr. From pushed for Mr. Clinton to run to the middle, and ultimately she signed off on that too. She approached Mr. From at a party. “I thought about it and you’re right, and we’re going to be a different kind of Democrat by the convention,” he remembered her saying.

Once in the White House, Mrs. Clinton was a different kind of first lady. Put in charge of revamping health care, she recruited a bright and supremely confident adviser in Ira C. Magaziner and assembled a bold if elaborate plan.

She impressed Capitol Hill. “Hillary never turns her head when she’s talking to someone,” noticed former Senator Alan Simpson of Wyoming, then the No. 2 Republican. “She is absolutely riveted. She doesn’t look around, like, ‘Oh, hi there, Tilly. How are you?’ or divert her attention from the person she’s talking to. That’s a gift.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Charles Robb, then a Democratic senator from Virginia, was among those who underestimated her. “I have to confess that I didn’t see the special qualities that she had,” he remembered. But “when she came over to give her first brief to a number of senators on health care, it was a tour de force. And I thought to myself, ‘How did you get so attracted to this Bill Clinton guy that you missed Hillary Rodham Clinton?’ ”

But the health care effort and its expansion of government involvement in the private sector proved politically toxic and generated deep internal division within the White House. Mr. Magaziner was seen as dismissive and few were willing to confront the president’s wife. “There were a lot of people who were intimidated,” said Leon E. Panetta, the chief of staff.

Ms. Shalala, who had been named secretary of health and human services, was one of the few who tried. “I told Hillary that this thing is just headed for disaster, and she told me I was just jealous that I wasn’t in charge and that was why I was complaining,” Mr. Edelman, who served as Ms. Shalala’s assistant secretary, remembered Ms. Shalala telling him.

Some of the White House economists were dubious and privately called Mrs. Clinton’s health care team “the Bolsheviks.” In return, according to Ms. Rivlin, the economists were “sometimes treated like the enemy.” Their suggested changes were ignored. “We could have beaten Ira alone,” said Mr. Blinder. “But we couldn’t beat Hillary.”

Indeed, the conflict left the president in a bind. “You can’t fire your wife,” Mr. Kantor observed.

In the end, the Clintons were stunned by the collapse of the effort in Congress, a defeat that helped lead to the Republican takeover in 1994. “They may be an irresistible force,” said William A. Galston, a domestic policy adviser, “but they met an immovable object.”

Shifting Gears

After the health care debacle, Mrs. Clinton “retreated for a while and licked her wounds,” as Mr. Galston put it. She was seen in the West Wing less and less, while traveling abroad more and more.

She asserted her influence in less visible ways. She persuaded her husband to make Madeleine Albright the first woman to serve as secretary of state. She put the brutal treatment of women by the Taliban in Afghanistan on the administration’s agenda.

She overcame State Department resistance to make a trip to Beijing, where she forcefully argued that women’s rights were human rights. She exulted so much afterward that she telephoned Samuel Berger, the deputy national security adviser, catching him at a Baltimore Orioles game, to thank him for making the trip possible.

But scandal was stalking the Clinton White House. She had resisted releasing files on the couple’s investment in a failed Arkansas land deal known as Whitewater and berated aides who pressed her to do so. “She just let everybody have it,” Mr. Panetta recalled. But she and her husband acceded to aides who, over Mr. Nussbaum’s objections, pushed to allow the appointment of an independent counsel.

It was a decision she would regret. “When is it going to end, Bernie?” Mr. Nussbaum remembered her asking years later.

That was before the independent counsel, Kenneth W. Starr, began investigating whether Mr. Clinton lied under oath about an affair with a former intern named Monica Lewinsky. Mr. Clinton denied the affair for months, and Mrs. Clinton publicly said she believed him. But not all of their confidants were so sure.

Ms. Shalala recalled a meeting with Mrs. Clinton with friends from California buzzing around. “Hillary said, ‘Thanks for supporting the president,’ ” Ms. Shalala said. “I don’t know whether she knew or not, but that was the moment in which I thought, there’s something here.”

Ms. Shalala was personally offended. “It was that it was an intern,” she said. “I just couldn’t tolerate that.” After Mr. Clinton later admitted that he had not told the truth, Ms. Shalala chastised him during a private cabinet meeting, a scolding that later made the newspapers. “No one at the White House seemed mad at me,” she said. “Hillary certainly wasn’t.”

Ms. Thomases said Mrs. Clinton was furious with her husband but never contemplated a split. “She would have hit him with a frying pan if one had been handed to her, but I don’t think she ever in her mind imagined leaving him or divorcing him,” she said.

Instead, Mrs. Clinton went up to Capitol Hill to rally Democrats against impeachment. “She was absolutely great,” recalled Lawrence Stein, the White House lobbyist. “They loved her. She called it a coup.”

Without her public support, Democrats might have abandoned the president, leading to pressure to resign or even a conviction in the Senate. Once again, Mrs. Clinton had rescued him.

And the Starr crisis transformed Mrs. Clinton’s public standing. With her poll numbers now sky high, she set her eyes on a Senate seat from New York, an idea that seemed so improbable that the White House press secretary, Joe Lockhart, denied it publicly until one day she sidled up to him, noted that he was from New York and started grilling him about voting patterns.

For both Clintons, the Senate race in 2000 became a way to purge the toxins of the scandal. Mr. Gore, now the vice president, wanted nothing to do with Mr. Clinton as he mounted his own White House bid. So the departing president focused his energy on his wife’s campaign.

“Given the fact that the vice president wasn’t interested in his political counsel, if he had not had Hillary running, it could have been a very difficult time for him,” Mr. Lockhart said.

And it began a new Clinton political career that, a decade and a half later, now seems aimed once again at the White House. Imagine what Mr. Nussbaum would have thought of that in the 1970s.

Yahoo: “Is it already too late for a Democrat to derail Hillary Clinton in 2016?”

By Andrew Romano

December 5, 2014

In an interview this week with New York magazine, comedian Chris Rock was asked to predict which Republican candidate would face off against Hillary Clinton in the 2016 presidential contest. He immediately rejected the premise of the question — i.e., that Clinton is a shoo-in for the Democratic nomination.

“It’s still not a done deal with Hillary,” Rock said. “Remember, she was ahead last time. She had all the black people. And she lost to somebody she really shouldn’t have lost to.”

Interviewer Frank Rich agreed. “Obama came out of nowhere, basically,” he said. “Who in the Democratic Party could go after Hillary, though?”

“There was no Barack Obama until Barack Obama either,” Rock replied.

Versions of this argument — Don’t worry, liberals: Hillary looked like a sure thing last time, too … until a better candidate saved the day — have been gaining traction recently.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

There's only one problem: History doesn't support Rock's thesis.

At this point in the 2008 cycle (the first week of December 2006) Barack Obama was already Barack Obama. His official announcement may have been two months off, but even then, he had a ton of money. He had a ton of media attention. He was hinting — heavily — that he was going to run. And the polling plainly showed that he was competitive.

Exactly eight years later, Obama's would-be successors — the three candidates who have openly expressed interest in challenging Clinton for the Democratic nomination in 2016 — are so far behind Obama's December 2006 benchmarks on each of these metrics that it would take a miracle for any of them to catch up.

In fact, the only person who comes close to measuring up to Obama circa 2006 has repeatedly said that she will not run: Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren.

Of course, even if Clinton were to capture the Democratic nomination in 2016, the general election would be anything but a coronation. The potential Republican field is full of fresh faces (Marco Rubio, Chris Christie) and seasoned pros (Jeb Bush, Mike Huckabee), and the eventual nominee is likely to emerge battle-tested and ready to give Clinton a run for her money.

Still, a close reading of the record suggests that if Warren doesn't get into the race, Clinton is not likely to face an Obama-caliber primary challenge. Let's rewind to December 2006 and take a look at where things stood for Obama back then versus where things stand right now:

Money: In December 2006, Democrats were just coming off a stunning midterm victory — the party won control of both houses of Congress for the first time since 1994 — and observers were praising Obama as the cycle's star surrogate. "Senator Barack Obama of Illinois has become the prize catch of the midterm campaign," wrote Anne Kornblut of The New York Times. "More sought after than virtually every other Democrat, Mr. Obama was fully booked, long ago, on a schedule to take him across a large swath of the country to help his party try to win control of Congress."

Obama's finances bore this out. Even though he wasn't running for office himself — he had just become a U.S. senator two years earlier — Obama managed to raise a staggering $4.39 million through his leadership PAC, Hope Fund, over the course of the cycle, plus another $1.02 million through his candidate committee, according to the Federal Election Commission. And he didn't just speak on behalf of his fellow Democrats; he shelled out a grand total of $770,968 to help them get elected. None of Obama's potential 2008 rivals — Clinton, John Edwards, Joe Biden, Chris Dodd — handed out nearly as much cash that year.

So how do today's would-be Obamas compare? It's not even close. Since the beginning of 2013, Bernie Sanders has raised $1.4 million and funneled $136,000 to other candidates. Martin O'Malley has raked in slightly less ($1.2 million) and spent a bit more ($296,497). And Jim Webb has barely registered at all, collecting a paltry $38,121 and donating exactly $0 to his fellow Democrats. In 2006, Obama spent the entire pre-presidential midterm cycle collecting chits and flexing his fundraising muscle. Sanders, Webb and O'Malley haveMedia: On Oct. 17, 2006, Obama published "The Audacity of Hope," a book that detailed his policy positions on a host of issues (education, health care, the war in Iraq) and served as a "thesis submission" for the U.S. presidency, as former presidential candidate Gary Hart put it at the time. By Nov. 9, The New York Times was declaring it a "surprise" hit. "The Audacity of Hope" seemed "primed for best-selling status," wrote Julie Bosman. "But its rapid rise to the No. 1 spot on the New York Times nonfiction list next Sunday, placing the author, the freshman Democratic senator from Illinois, ahead of heavyweight authors like John Grisham, Bill O'Reilly and even Bob Woodward, is something of a publishing stunner."

Bosman shouldn't have been surprised. By late 2006, Obama — who'd skyrocketed to national stardom more than two years earlier with his keynote address at the 2004 Democratic National Convention — had already appeared on dozens of major magazine covers. One of them was the cover of Newsweek's big year-end "Who's Next" issue in 2004 — an accomplishment that he would repeat two years later when he showed up alongside Hillary Clinton on the December 2006 edition of "Who's Next," making him the franchise's first (and only) two-time cover boy. Obama's first book, "Dreams from My Father," had also been a best-seller. During the first seven days of December 2006, the Illinois senator's name was mentioned in more than 650 U.S. new stories, according to a search of the Nexis archives. And when Obama traveled to New Hampshire for the first time on Dec. 10, 150 journalists followed him there.

"Has he cast some kind of magic spell over the normally hard-bitten, cynical, run-over-your-grandmother-for-a-story press corps?" wrote Howard Kurtz in a column headlined "The Media's New Rock Star." "Or are they just engaged in the audacity of hope that they might get to cover a young and exciting African-American candidate with a shot at winning?"

Neither Sanders, Webb nor O'Malley has inspired — or fueled — this sort of media frenzy. Sanders' last proper book was published in 2011; it currently ranks 141,416th on Amazon.com. Webb's ranks 34,153rd. O'Malley has yet to publish a book. None of them was mentioned in more than 80 U.S. news stories over the last seven days. And there's little chance that any of them will attract 150 reporters next time they visit New Hampshire. not kept pace.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Polling: This one is fairly straightforward. According to Real Clear Politics, five major outlets released Democratic presidential primary polls during the first two weeks of December 2006. They showed Clinton leading Obama by an average of 20 percentage points; Obama's support averaged 15.8 percentage points; Clinton's averaged 35.8.

This December is different. Right now, Sanders is averaging 3.5 percent in the 2016 polls. Webb is averaging 1.4 percent. O'Malley is averaging 1.2 percent. And Clinton is averaging 62.7 percent.

In December 2006, Barack Obama was already the second-most-popular politician in the country. He had already gained a significant amount of support among Democrats. And even though Clinton was way ahead, she wasn't even close to getting 50 percent of the primary vote.

Today, almost two-thirds of Democrats support Clinton. Statistically speaking, she's nearly twice as strong as she was eight years ago. Meanwhile, the three politicians who are explicitly considering challenging her — Sanders, Webb and O'Malley — are nowhere near where Obama was in the polls at this point in the 2008 cycle.

Which isn't to say that, should they choose to compete in 2016, Sanders, Webb and O'Malley would be poor candidates. Anything can happen in politics; perhaps one of them will run to Clinton's left and energize liberals who crave a less "inevitable" nominee.

The point is simply that by December 2006, Obama was already much, much closer to becoming that candidate than any of this year's openly interested alternatives.

Which brings us back to a candidate who isn't openly interested yet: Elizabeth Warren.

Sure, by December 2006, the real Obama was already out in the bullpen, warming up for all to see. In September, he flew to Iowa for Tom Harkin's famous steak fry. In October, he appeared on "Meet the Press" and told Tim Russert that "it is true that I have thought about [running for president] over the last several months." And by mid-December, Obama insiders were telling Newsweek that their man was "about 80 percent likely" to run.

Warren, on the other hand, has insisted that she isn't running. But what if she were to change her mind?

Many liberals are urging Warren to step up because they believe her brand of economic populism could bedevil Clinton much in the way that Obama's anti-Iraq-War message bedeviled Clinton in 2008. And on paper, at least, they're right: She's the only Democrat who even remotely resembles Obama (circa December 2006) in terms of fundraising skill, media appeal and polling prowess. Warren's latest book, published earlier this year, was a New York Times best-seller. She was the Democratic Party's most in-demand surrogate of 2014. She raised $4.59 million this cycle and disbursed nearly $600,000 to other Democrats. And she's polling as high as 17 percent in recent surveys.

The bottom line is that Obama didn't "come out of nowhere" in 2008 — but in 2016, Webb, Sanders and O'Malley would have to. So far, only Warren is on the map.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· December 8 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton attends a wildlife conservation event co-hosted by The Royal Foundation and the Clinton Foundation (The Hill)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

· December 16 – New York, NY: Sec. Clinton honored by Robert F. Kennedy Center for Justice and Human Rights (Politico)

· January 21 – Saskatchewan, Canada: Sec. Clinton keynotes the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce's "Global Perspectives" series (MarketWired)

· January 21 – Winnipeg, Canada: Sec. Clinton keynotes the Global Perspectives series (Winnipeg Free Press)

· February 24 – Santa Clara, CA: Sec. Clinton to Keynote Address at Inaugural Watermark Conference for Women (PR Newswire)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jacob Roberts" <jroberts@progressivemediausa.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 6/23/2008 4:18:38 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Evening 06/23/08

Main Topics: Charlie Black controversy, offshore drilling, McCain's fundraising, Iran, Barr-mentum

Summary of Shift: In McCain news Charlie Black's tasteless comments received an exceptional amount of coverage, leading both Countdown and Race for the White House and a few roundtables/panels. In the limelight equally, pundits and strategists also raised the question of whether McCain's monetary incentive for a zero-emission car is a gimmick. Other McCain news included the recent Newsweek poll that puts Obama at a 15-point advantage above his rival.
Rising gas prices, in and outside the context of the race took center stage tonight. Obama's shift on public financing remained a hot topic. George Carlin's death was covered seriously, with most notable memorial coverage on MSNBC's Countdown.

Highlights
1) Charlie Black's remarks from Fortune magazine
   a. CBS: Couric reports that McCain's campaign was shocked by Black's comments
   b. NBC: Brian William re-caps the controversy
   c. CNN: Bash links Black's remarks to Bush's style of campaigning in '04
   d. CNN: Bash links Black's remarks to McCain's reaction to Bhutto assassination
   e. CNN: Lou Dobbs finds Black's remarks somewhat incoherent
2) CNN & FNC: At press availability McCain elaborates on offshore drilling and fundraising
3) MSNBC: Fiorina says she cannot prove a negative when it comes to Iran
4) MSNBC: Bob Barr could potentially be a spoiler for McCain
5) MSNBC: mid-day reports from David Shuster summarize Black's remarks on a second terrorist attack on the US and his following apology [no clip]
6) MSNBC: Hardball's big number re-caps Bush's failed efforts to install a US-friendly television station in the Middle East. $500 million to a station that bashed the US and Israel while promoting pro-Iranian policies [no clip]
7) MSNBC: Keith Olbermann pokes fun at McCain for his prize offering on the zero emission car and skewers him for his connections to Gramm [no clip]
8) MSNBC: Mark Green calls the McCain campaign 'the zig-zag express' [no clip]
9) CBS WUSA: Program asks viewers to write in their opinions on whether they believe McCain's battery incentive will speed up the invention process [no clip]

Clips
Highlight #1
Katie Couric Re-Caps the Latest Black Scandal on CBS Nightly News (CBS 06/23/08 6:43pm)
KATIE COURIC: [McCain's] campaign was shocked by a comment from a top advisor. [...] Senator McCain's political advisor, Charlie Black told Fortune magazine that, if there is another terror attack, 'Certainly it would be a big advantage to him,' meaning McCain.

JOHN MCCAIN: If he said that, I do not know the context. I strenuously disagree.

COURIC: In a statement Black said, 'I deeply regret the comments. They were inappropriate.' Barack Obama's campaign called Black's comments, 'A complete disgrace and is exactly the type of politics that needs to change.'

Brian Williams Summarizes the Latest Black Scandal (NBC 06/23/08
BRIAN WILLIAMS: [...] John McCain's chief strategist, GOP veteran, Charlie Black apologized tonight for telling a reporter that another terrorist attack in the US would help McCain's prospects in the election. Charlie Black also told Fortune magazine that Benazir Bhutto's assassination was unfortunate but it helped McCain in the New Hampshire primary because, according to Black, McCain's reaction showed he was ready to be commander in chief.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Charlie Black said tonight that he regretted making the comments and they were inappropriate.

Black's Comments Fit Perfectly in the Politics of Fear (CNN 06/23/08 08:03pm)
WOLF BLITZER: The politics of terrorism. […] The Chief strategist Charlie Black is quoted […] as saying a new terrorists attack on America would benefit McCain's campaign. […] "Certainly it would be a big advantage to him." […]

DANA BASH: The McCain campaign really struggled to get a correction, really an apology out from Charlie Black. […] It was immediately clear to the McCain campaign that they had absolutely no choice but to clean up Charlie Black's comments. Because they understand full well that this plays into the kind of thing that democrats have really hit the Bush Administration, specifically Bush campaigns, for doing over the last election cycle in 04', which is playing to the politics of fear. [...]

JOHN MCCAIN: I cannot imagine why he would say it. It's not true. It's ah. I've worked tirelessly since 9/11 to prevent another attack on the United States of America. My record is very clear. If he said that, and I do not know the context, I strenuously disagree.

[…]

WOLF: How damaging is this?

CANDY CROWLEY: Well it plays into Democrats perfectly. […]

[…]

WOLF: He may have a point there, Charlie Black. […] When registered voters were asked who would do a better job on terrorism, Obama got 33% McCain got 52%. […]

JOE KLEIN: [...] This is part of a long-term Republican pattern. It goes back to Karl Rove saying that the war in Iraq would work to Bush's advantage. I mean it's a really heinous thing to say. [...]

McCain's Comments after Bhutto's Assassination Legitimize Charlie Black's Statement (CNN 06/23/08 06:03pm)
WOLF BLITZER: John McCain's chief strategist now says it was "inappropriate for him to talk about the political advantages of terror". Charlie Black was quoted in "Fortune" magazine, as saying a new attack on US soil would be a "big advantage for McCain". Black was also quoted as saying that McCain's knowledge and ability to talk about the assassination of the former Pakistani Prime Minister, Benazir Bhutto, showed that he's ready to be commander and chief. And therefore helped his campaign at a crucial time. […]

DANA BASH: This is obviously is not what the McCain campaign expected their message to be today. And it was not very long before they put out a statement about Charlie Black. […] What the campaign says is that Charlie deeply regrets his comments. They were inappropriate and he recognizes that the candidate we work for has devoted his entire adult life to putting his country and placing its security before every other consideration. Black is apparently saying that he doesn't remember actually making those specific statements. But he's also not denying it. The point that the campaign says he was trying to make is that he believes that anytime the political discussion is about terrorism or national security it's a big advantage for John McCain. That's something that Charlie Black has said to me many times as have others of the McCain team.

BLITZER: McCain himself was asked about it at a press conference and he wasted no time at all repudiating these kind of statements.

BASH: He did. He definitely repudiated the kinds of comments. Specifically where they most stung is Charlie Black talking about what a potential future terrorist attack could benefit McCain. […] I was with John McCain that day that Benazir Bhutto was assassinated in Iowa. He was very, very strong in coming off, right off the bat in that town hall, saying that he has credentials in that area, that he knew Benazir Bhutto, He'd been to Pakistan, [...]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

JOHN MCCAIN: I'm the one with the experience the knowledge and the judgment, so perhaps it may serve to enhance those credentials.

BASH: So McCain at that time the day Benazir Bhutto was assassinated basically conceding that his credentials, he hoped, would at that time, he was running in a pretty open field in the republican primary, help him. And what Black is saying in this comment is that in the end it did. Obviously what has hurt him or what Democrats are already pouncing on is the suggestion that a future terrorist attack would help the McCain campaign. The Obama campaign is already calling that a disgrace.

Lou Dobbs and Panel: Would a Terrorist Attack Really Benefit McCain? (CNN 06/23/08 8:03pm)
LOU DOBBS: Are you at all offended that not too much note has been taken today of the fact that a "Fortune" magazine reporter asked Charlie Black the question: what would happen if there was another terrorist attack? It's not like Charlie Black came with this out of whole cloth and created this sentence.

ERROL LOUIS: [...] I think the problem is that in some ways it's not just offensive its also somewhat incoherent.

DOBBS: The question or the answer?

LOUIS: the answer. The McCain campaign it sounds like they are trying to have it both ways. If the surge is somewhat successful, the president's policy to which McCain is joined at the hip. He'll say this is evidence that my wisdom and experience are proven right. On the other hand his advisor is saying well you know what if there's an attack and it looks like security is going down the tubes that will help you too. It doesn't make a lot of sense. [...]

DIANA WEST: [...] The fact is that any reminder of the fact that we are in a war on global jihad benefits the candidate that believes we are in a war time situation. Senator Obama has made it very clear that he believes terrorism is simply a matter of cops and robbers. So I think what we are looking at is the divide between the so called September 10th mindset of Senator Obama and the September 11th mindset of John McCain.

LOUIS: After hundreds of billions of dollars spent isn't it safe to say that we are not supposed to be having attacks on American soil. So in the horrible event that that did happen does not speak well of the approach that's been tried for 8 years.

WEST: The war continues. We have not won this war. [...] I don't know if Senator McCain fully understands it, but he does grasps that we are in and need to be in offensive mode.

DOBBS: Are you supporting McCain or are you opposed to him? You're talking about what he grasps and what he doesn't. You make him sound like he has a tenuous hold.

WEST: I feel like most people do. [...]

HANK SHEINKOPF: [...] Charlie Black made a big boo boo. [...] All it did is open up John McCain to more commercials of by the way 100 years in Iraq John McCain and how silly you look today. Not good for America and not good for our fighting men and women.

DOBBS: [...] The hundred years thing, you want to put that in context. [...]

SHEINKOPF: [...]He said if required we will have akin to what we have in Korea and other places, combat troops on the ground. [...]

[Clip of McCain's response to Black's comment]

DOBBS: What in the world is he trying to say. I don't even know what he's trying to distance himself from.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SHEINKOPF: These are all losing arguments. Particularly younger people are going to say I would never give you my vote, why? Because I can't understand what your saying. […]

Highlight #2
McCain's Media Avail: Should Florida and California Drill Offshore (CNN 06/23/08 02:48pm)
QUESTIONER: […] Do you think that Californians and Floridians should want to drill off their shores?

MCCAIN: Well according to a poll just in the last couple days, the citizens of Florida by a significant majority said that they, if it was obviously environmentally safe and sound, that they would support it. So I don't know about California, I have not seen any polling data. […] Do I think they should approve it? Sure I'd love for them to. But I leave that decision up to them. Obviously I want the moratorium lifted because I'd like to explore every possible way to bridge us through this time when we are still going to be dependant on foreign oil.

McCain Hits Obama on Rejecting Public Financing and Joint Town Halls at Press Conference (FNC 6/23/08 2:44pm)
JOHN MCCAIN: [...] And finally, I'd just like to say again, my deep disappointment concerning Senator Obama's again, absolutely reversing his commitment, not to me, as he said when he said that if I accepted public financing for campaigns that he would do the same, time after time after time, committed publicly that he would sit down and discuss it with me before he made a decision, which he didn't do, and obviously he has gone back on his word. The President has to keep his word when it's popular and when it's not popular. And he's done so on this issue of public financing of the general election. The first time since the post-Watergate reforms, a major presidential candidate will not accept public financing. I'm not concerned about him out-raising me as far as money is concerned.

I've never been in a hotly contested race that I wasn't out-raised. I wouldn't be here, as the candidate and the nominee of my party, the presumed nominee of my party, if it had been all about raising money because I was clearly out-raised and outspent. But what bothers me is how the American people, one has trust and confidence in the commitments we make to them, if we continue to reverse our word as he has with Town Hall meetings and most importantly and as importantly the issue of public financing. So I'm ready again, the American people will make the appropriate judgment but I don't think it does anything to help what our first priority should be is to restore trust and confidence in those of us in elected office when we go back on our word.

Highlight #3
Nancy Pfotenhauer Complains That She Cannot Prove the Success of US Status Quo Iran Policy (MSNBC 06/23/08
DAVID SHUSTER: Regarding the proposal today, $300 million should be given to an inventor for a battery for a hybrid vehicle. [...] Some democrats are saying that this is a campaign gimmick.

NANCY PFOTENHAUER: [...] John McCain has been a leader in his area and [...] with Joe Lieberman introduced a global climate change bill a couple of years ago that senator Obama praised in, I think it was June 22nd or July 22nd of 2005. [McCain's] been a leader on these things. He's got a plan in the short and the long term and it does include spurring innovations; not through industrial policy but by identifying an objective and then unleashing innovation to try to meet that objective.

Obama's answer is no to everything. No to drilling. No to nuclear power, which is zero emission. No even to a gas tax, that would give, at least, a modest amount of relief to the lowest-income folks in this country who feel the rising gas prices the most.

SHUSTER: […] explain what has been accomplished with the policy of not talking with Iran. Has any progress been made? Because a lot of people would suggest Iran simply just continues up their nuclear centrifuges and we're still not talking to them.

PFOTENHAUER: Well it's tough, David because you're expected to prove a negative. What we do know is that what Senator Obama is advocating is not just at odds with U.S. policy; he has undercut all of our European allies and he's gone against, at least, three U.N. Security Council resolutions. Some people say four and those resolutions were passed for a reason.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I think it was Mitt Romney, who said why would you give a propaganda bonanza to this tyrant and dictator that he would have at home, which would strengthen his political hand at home. The answer is to go after sanctions and to go after them hard. Do things like freeze their national bank accounts. Go after their money! That's what's gonna affect these guys.

SHUSTER: Right, but nothing has affected them yet.

PFOTENHAUER: Well it's been a real challenge and it is a challenge when you're dealing with someone who is as radical and as bent on destruction as Ahmadinejad is and his backers. I mean, here you've got a man who, as you know David has said The Holocaust never happened, called Israel a 'stinking corpse' and still continues to say his goal is the destruction of Israel.

I still don't believe and I think you've got republicans and democrats and nonpartisan foreign policy experts who say that Barack Obama's position frankly revealed either ignorance or naivety or arrogance and it was a mistake that he has tried to backfill and back-peddle away from ever since he's made it. All of a sudden, instead of preconditions he was talking about 'preparations.'

A couple of folks said it was plain embarrassing. Of course there are preparations. You know, you prepare for this interview. Of course you prepare for a meeting. It was embarrassing that a presidential candidate would say that.

Highlight #4
Bob Barr Discusses His Candidacy and Whether He'll Quit If He Ends Up Being a Spoiler for McCain (MSNBC 06/23/08 4:00pm)
DAVID SCHUSTER: Explain what a libertarian is for voters and explain how your views are different from Senator McCain.

BOB BARR: A libertarian is a person who believes the size, the scope, the power and the cost of the federal government ought to be minimized and the power of the individual, that is individual freedom, needs to be maximized. So that is at the core of everything the Libertarian Party and I stand for [...] Neither Senator Obama nor Senator McCain bears any real resemblance to that philosophy. Both of them believe in very large, powerful, big, expensive government. Senator McCain may be slightly less than Senator Obama but on virtually every policy we differ based on the size of the federal government.

SCHUSTER: Mr. Barr, I know that you're a pragmatic enough to realize that our country, for better or for worse, is still locked into a two party system. Given that, are you ok with the role of spoiler?

BARR: I don't intend to be a spoiler. We intend to make this a very competitive three-way race. We've hired as our campaign manager the gentleman that ran Ross Perot's campaigns. Ross Perot was not a spoiler. He was a very serious candidate. He gained 20% of the vote back in 1992. We intend to do very well in this race, in a three-way competitive race. We could win, we know that's a long shot but this is a very positive race [...] We are on track right now to be on the ballot in 49 states [...] The only state that continues to be a problem is Oklahoma.

SCHUSTER: Mr. Barr, I know that you don't envision this scenario but let's suppose, two weeks before the November election the polling has you at say 5% or less. At that point, so that you don't hurt John McCain, presumably conservatives would, who don't support you might go for John McCain, would you then throw your support behind Senator McCain, if you were that far back?

BARR: First of all, that's an unlikely scenario. We intend to be doing much better than that and it is my intention to stay in this race to provide the American people who believe that both parties have given them far too much government and far too little individual liberty to make sure that both of the major parties adhere at least somewhat to our agenda so that we influence the debate.

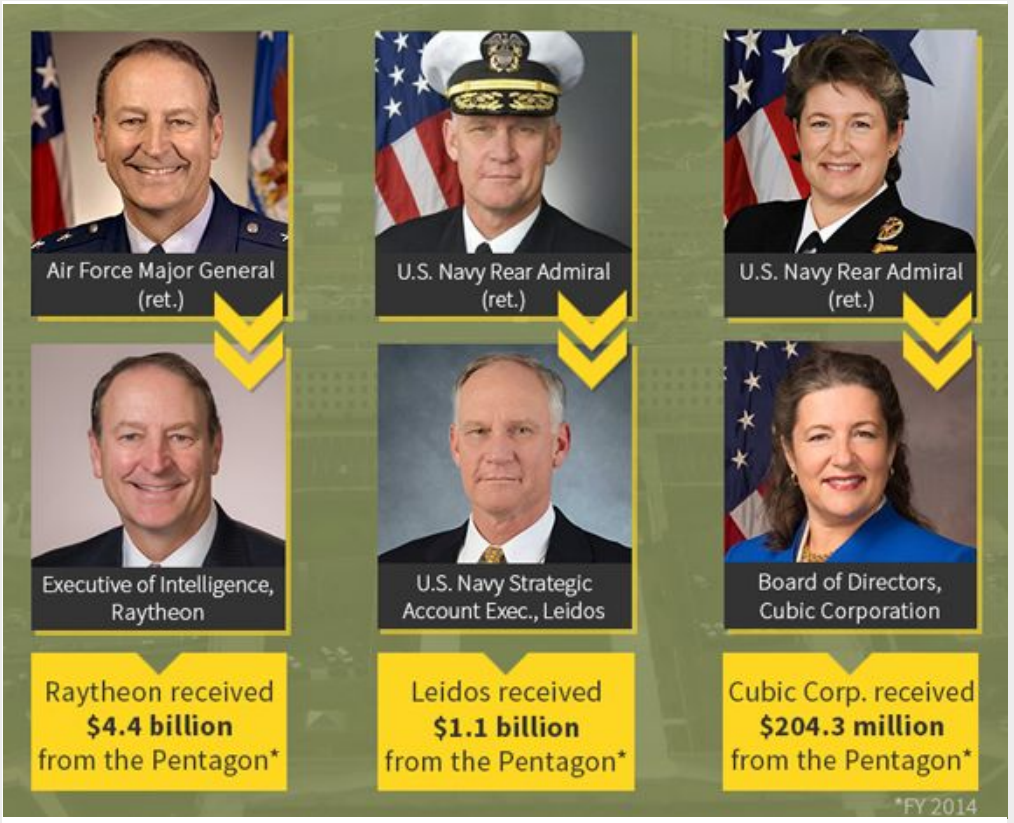
--
Jacob Roberts
Media Analyst

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

PMUSA
(c) 208.420.3470
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com



E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Leslie Garvey, Project On Government Oversight" <leslie@pogo.org>
To:	"John Podesta" <podesta@law.georgetown.edu>
Date:	7/25/2015 1:30:14 AM
Subject:	Weekly Reader: From Battlefield to Boardroom

POGO
PROJECT ON GOVERNMENT OVERSIGHT

From Battlefield to Boardroom: Facilitating the DoD Revolving Door

The Project On Government Oversight has learned of a new avenue the private sector is using to facilitate the revolving door between the Department of Defense (DoD) and defense contractors.

Read more

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Department of Justice's Decision Undercuts, Weakens Federal Watchdogs

IGs cannot be effective watchdogs on behalf of Congress and the American public if they have to negotiate with agency leaders for access to records on a case-by-case basis.

Read more

Watching the Watchdogs: GAO Finds Problems with Commerce IG

A recent GAO report highlights deficiencies of the Commerce Department's Office of Inspector General under the former IG.

Read more

DoD Reply to 2010 FOIA: Go to the Army

After five years, POGO finally receives a FOIA response from the Department of Defense...sort of.

Read more

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Dodd-Frank Turns Five; Too Soon to Celebrate?

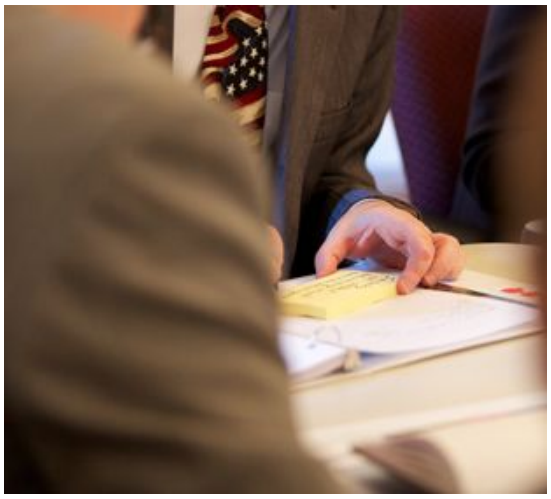
The annual behemoth defense spending bill has become the method of choice for a lot of elected officials to shuttle unpopular legislation through Congress in near secrecy.

Read more

We're Not Impressed with DoD Inspector General's Lackluster Investigation of Navy Officials

Unfortunately we're not surprised to find that the Department of Defense Inspector General did not hold senior Pentagon officials accountable.

Read more



Report Sheds More Light on Misconduct by Nuclear Contractor

Nuclear contractor Sandia Corporation illegally used federal funds for lobbying, but will still likely be able to rebid for the billion dollar contract.

Read more

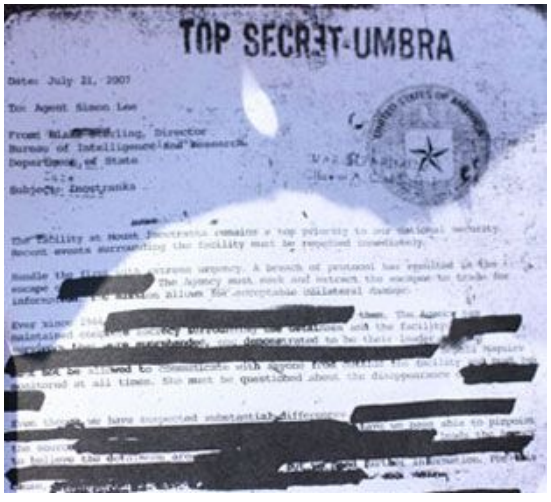
This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

FOIA: Release to One, Wait, Release to All

The Project On Government Oversight celebrates the Freedom of Information Act pilot program, "Release to One, Release to All," which will share requested information to the public—not only the requester.

Read more

From the World of POGO



Public Listening Session on Federal Coal

Wednesday, July 29 | 1:00-4:00pm ET

Currently, outdated rules allow coal companies mining on public lands to pay less in royalty payments than other industries, cheating American taxpayers out of millions of dollars. Join POGO in attending this session and voicing your concerns.

More details

Open Gov National Action Plan Public Meeting

Thursday, July 30 | 2:00-4:00pm ET

This event will bring together civil society experts and U.S. Government colleagues who lead open government efforts across the Executive Branch to discuss this important work, providing individual attendees with an opportunity to share ideas and information.

More details

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

We're Hiring: Director of Communications

Do you or someone you know have what it takes to get our message to the masses? We're hiring a new Director of Communications to oversee a strong communications team and perform a variety of functions, particularly in traditional and online outreach.

More details

donate

CHARITY NAVIGATOR ★★★★ Four Star Charity

2014 TOP-RATED NONPROFIT

POGO :: 1100 G Street, NW, Suite 500 :: Washington, DC 20005 :: (202) 347-1122

View this email online | Unsubscribe

POWERED BY blackbaud nonprofit software

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sara Du Bois" <sdubois@progressivemediausa.org>
To: "Sara Du Bois" <SDuBois@progressivemediausa.org>
Date: 5/27/2008 1:12:20 AM
Subject: [big campaign] '08 Daily News Clips - 5/27

08 Election Daily News Clips
May 27th, 2008

Candidate Tracking:

All times in Eastern Standard Time

11am McCain: Foreign Policy Speech in Denver, CO
- Tracking scheduled for this event
1:30pm McCain: Finance Reception in Denver, CO

6pm McCain/BUSH: Finance Reception in Phoenix, AZ

News Clips:

MCCAIN NEWS

Memorial Day Draws Two Messages on Iraq (NYT 5/27/08)
By JEFF ZELENY and MICHAEL FALCONE
Senator John McCain stood before hundreds of flag-waving veterans and their families on Monday and vowed not to waver in his support of the Iraq war. "Even," he said, "if I must stand athwart popular opinion."
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/05/27/us/politics/27campaign.html?ref=politics
See also: http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/05/26/AR2008052601696.html
Link to transcript of McCain's speech: http://thepage.time.com/mccains-memorial-day-address/

Business to McCain camp: What role? (Politico 5/27/08)
By: Jeanne Cummings
What part, if any, are members of the business community to play in the Republican's campaign?
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0508/10635.html

On global warming, it's McCain v. GOP (Politico 5/27/08)
By: Martin Kady II
GOP must choose to embrace McCain's ideas or stick with Bush's hands-off approach.
http://www.politico.com/news/stories/0508/10637.html

McCain says Obama has long wanted to "surrender" in Iraq (Politico blog 5/26/08)
By Jonathan Martin
McCain used his Memorial Day speech today in New Mexico to pay tribute to the nation's fallen and defend his stance on the GI Bill, never mentioning Obama's name But then, in an interview with AP, he ratcheted up the rhetoric and assailed his rival for not having been to Iraq for two years.
http://www.politico.com/blogs/jonathanmartin/0508/
McCain_says_Obama_has_long_wanted_to_surrender_in_Iraq.html
Link to AP interview: http://news.yahoo.com/s/ap/20080526/ap_on_el_pr/
mccain;_ylt=AkPz1sciPI08OJ_WWJdyKLWyFz4D

McCain "sick at heart" over mistakes in Iraq war (Reuters 5/26/08)
By Tim Gaynor
Republican presidential candidate John McCain sought on Monday to distance himself from President George W. Bush's handling of the Iraq war, telling veterans on Memorial Day he was "sick at heart" at mistakes made in the conflict now in its sixth year.
http://www.reuters.com/article/vcCandidateFeed7/idUSN2633108820080526

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

McCain defends opposition to GI Bill (CNN 5/26/08)
* Sen. John McCain says general must have time to bring stability to Iraq
* McCain says GI Bill sponsored by Democrats would hurt military
* McCain, Sen. Barack Obama sparring over expanded veterans' education benefits
* President Bush will attend a fundraiser for McCain in Arizona http://www.cnn.com/2008/POLITICS/05/26/mccain/

McCain Breaks with Bush Over North Korea (Washington Post blog 5/26/08)
By Glenn Kessler
Sen. John McCain broke today with President Bush's new policy on North Korea, co-authoring an opinion article with Sen. Joe Lieberman (I-Conn.) in which he called for a return to Bush's original demand of a complete, verifiable, irreversible disarmament of North Korea's nuclear programs.
http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/05/26/mccain_breaks_with_bush_over_n.html

McCain balances Latino voters, GOP base (Dallas Morning News 5/27/08)
By WAYNE SLATER
With Barack Obama his likely opponent in the fall, John McCain sees an opportunity to make inroads among Hispanic voters by touting himself as a different kind of Republican.
http://www.dallasnews.com/sharedcontent/dws/news/politics/topstories/stories/052708dnpolmccain.3c10fe6.html

John McCain 2008 Launches New Web Ad: "Memorial Day" (McCain press release 5/26/08)
ARLINGTON, VA -- U.S. Senator John McCain's presidential campaign today released a new web ad honoring the service and sacrifice of Hispanics in our Armed Forces on Memorial Day.
(Web-1:00)
http://www.johnmccain.com/informing/news/PressReleases/6d9d37e4-ece7-4352-bc9a-f5bc3ce316d7.htm
Link to video of ad: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8k3Or06g9YA
Link to video of ad (with Spanish subtitles): http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8k3Or06g9YA

Harkin Attacks McCain for Having Served In the Military Too Much (ABC blog 5/26/08)
By Jake Tapper
In the Des Moines Register, Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, said that the worldview of Navy veteran Sen. John McCain, R-Ariz., who is the son and grandson of Admirals, has been shaped too much by the military.
http://blogs.abcnews.com/politicalpunch/2008/05/harkin-attacks.html

President Bush in town to raise money for Sen. McCain (Arizona Republic 5/27/08)
Sen. John McCain will bring his presidential campaign to town today, accompanied by the man he hopes to succeed.
http://www.azcentral.com/news/articles/2008/05/27/20080527mccain0527.html

McCain to Make a Rare Appearance With Bush (WSJ 5/26/08)
By Laura Meckler
President Bush and John McCain will appear together at a fund-raiser in Phoenix Tuesday, the first time in nearly three months that the Republican presidential candidate will be seen beside the man he hopes to succeed.
http://online.wsj.com/article/SB121185084455621623.html?mod=rss_whats_news_us&apl=y&r=633085

Citing desire for closed press, McCain cancels low-selling fundraising event (ThinkProgress 5/26/08)
The McCain campaign has scaled back two fundraisers this week involving President Bush, claiming a policy of "closed press" for fundraising events... Press concerns may have nothing to do with it. On Friday, the Phoenix Business Journal reported that the "event was not selling enough tickets to fill the Convention Center space, and that there were concerns about more anti-war protesters showing up outside the venue than attending the fundraiser inside."
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/05/26/citing-desire-for-closed-press-mccain-cancels-low-selling-fundraisng-event/

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Cindy McCain: Like Hubby, Not So Charitable (Harper's 5/26/08)
By Ken Silverstein
Senator John McCain's charitable works don't appear to be terribly impressive. As I reported here a few months back, he has essentially been the sole contributor to the John and Cindy McCain Family foundation, which between 2001 and 2006 made contributions of roughly $1.6 million, of which more than $500,000 went to his kids' private schools. So McCain apparently received major tax deductions for supporting elite schools attended by his children.
http://harpers.org/archive/2008/05/hbc-90003001

Sistani vs McCain (Atlantic online 5/26/08)
By Andrew Sullivan
The entire premise of John McCain's view of Iraq policy going forward is that the US will be able to position permanent military bases in the heart of the Middle East, on the model of Japan and South Korea. The trouble is: Iraq is part of the holiest territory in Islam and a pact with infidel occupiers simply isn't going to wash http://andrewsullivan.theatlantic.com/the_daily_dish/2008/05/sistani-vs-mcca.html

McCain's Mouth-Watering Weekend (Washington Post 5/27/08)
By Amy Argetsinger and Roxanne Roberts; C03
If Americans voted for president based on barbecuing skills, John McCain would win in a landslide. The Arizona senator spent Memorial Day weekend doing what he loves best: presiding over the grill at his Sedona ranch. "He barbecued ribs all night," Sen. Lindsey Graham told CBS's Bob Schieffer. Graham was among the 20 or so guests (Mitt Romney, Joe Lieberman, Sam Brownback, Charlie Crist, Bobby Jindal) invited for the "purely social" get-together.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/05/26/AR2008052602508.html

It depends what your definition of "his" is (Daily Kos 5/26/08)
...now that McCain is rejecting Mr. Parsley for his hateful rhetoric, how does the McCain campaign explain those earlier, glowing words? Easy. According to a McCain spokesman, McCain said that Parsley was: "...a spiritual guide, not his spiritual guide."
http://www.dailykos.com/storyonly/2008/5/26/12222/8235

In McCain Campaign, a Lobbying Labyrinth (NYT 5/25/08)
By BARRY MEIER
Rick Davis, the manager of Senator John McCain's presidential campaign, is a typical Washington insider in many ways, having long worked as both a lobbyist and a political operative along the intersection of politics, policy and money.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/05/25/us/politics/25davis.html?hp
See LA Times "Would-be reformers McCain and Obama challenged by lobbyist culture": http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-lobbyists26-2008may26,0,489947.story

Worries in G.O.P. About McCain Camp Disarray (NYT 5/25/08)
By ADAM NAGOURNEY
Senator John McCain's presidential campaign is in a troubled stretch, hindered by resignations of staff members, a lagging effort to build a national campaign organization and questions over whether he has taken full advantage of Democratic turmoil to present a case for his candidacy, Republicans say.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/05/25/us/politics/25mccain.html

McCain contributions are rolling in (LA Times 5/25/08)
By Dan Morain
The presumed GOP presidential nominee has been attending a string of high-dollar fundraisers.
http://www.latimes.com/news/politics/la-na-mccainmoney25-2008may25,0,4461228.story

The Freedom Nonagenda (NYT 5/25/08)
By JAMES TRAUB
...We don't hear much about the propagation of democracy these days, largely because President Bush's own democratic crusade has sown so much chaos, and so little liberty, abroad, and above all in the target region of the Middle East. Both Barack Obama and Hillary Clinton shy away from Bush's clarion calls. But not McCain. In the 2000 Republican primaries, it was he, and not Bush, who was the candidate of the so-called national greatness conservatives and argued for an assertive, interventionist policy. Now McCain sounds the same resonant tones that come so naturally to Bush.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

http://www.nytimes.com/2008/05/25/magazine/25wwln-lede-t.html

McCain's Albatross: His Age and Party Ties to Bush (WSJ blog 5/25/08)
By Peter A. Brown
The key to John McCain's ability to overcome the strongest anti-Republican tide since Watergate will be proving to voters that he is neither too old nor too close to President Bush, and can still change the way things are done in Washington.
http://blogs.wsj.com/politicalperceptions/2008/05/25/mccains-albatross-his-age-and-party-ties-to-bush/

Obama, McCain have "righteous" problems (Reuters 5/25/08)
By Ed Stoddard
Republican presidential candidate John McCain has a "Religious Right" problem. His likely Democratic rival, Barack Obama, has a Rev. Wright problem.
http://www.reuters.com/article/vcCandidateFeed7/idUSN2035177620080525

Virginia Is Up For Grabs In Fall (Washington Post 5/25/08)
By Tim Craig; C01
Aides to Obama, McCain Say State Will Be Competitive
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/05/24/AR2008052401659.html

McCain's Medical Records Indicate He Is Cancer-Free, Generally Healthy (Washington Post 5/24/08)
By Michael D. Shear and David Brown; A03
As he sought the presidency twice over the last decade, Sen. John McCain has been the object of unusually aggressive medical care by a large team of doctors, who on Friday released thousands of pages of records that document he has been cancer-free for almost eight years.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/05/23/AR2008052300565.html

McCain adviser apologizes for saying that it's sometimes 'accurate' to describe a woman as a 'bitch' (ThinkProgress 5/24/08)
During CNN's primary coverage on May 20, CNN senior analyst Jeff Toobin criticized a New York Times column that published a joke about Sen. Hillary Clinton (D-NY) being a "white bitch." But CNN contributor Alex Castellanos, who is also an adviser to Sen. John McCain's (R-AZ) campaign, disagreed, saying that a woman sometimes deserves to be called a "bitch." Yesterday on the Situation Room, Castellanos finally apologized for his remarks:
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/05/24/mccain-adviser-apologizes-for-saying-that-its-sometimes-accurate-to-describe-a-woman-as-a-bitch/

McCain's Fantasy War on Earmarks (Washington Post "FactChecker" blog 5/23/08)
...McCain's talk about eliminating $100 billion a year in earmarks is largely fantasy. His advisers are now promoting a more realistic plan of eliminating $100 billion in overall spending. But it is difficult to take even that promise very seriously given the fact that the senator refuses to identify exactly which projects he will be cut. To use a phrase coined by George H.W. Bush, this is "voodoo economics," based more on wishful thinking than on hard data or carefully considered policy proposals.
http://blog.washingtonpost.com/fact-checker/2008/05/mccains_fantasy_war_on_earmark.html

McCain Camp Reassures Right Wing: Comprehensive Immigration Reform Comment Was 'Poorly Worded' (ThinkProgress 5/23/08)
Yesterday, Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) spoke to a "friendly audience" of business leaders about immigration policy, a topic he has been quiet on ever since the right wing erupted in rage over his support for the Senate's immigration reform bill. After the business leaders complained about the difficulty in obtaining temporary visas for certain immigrants, McCain said reform needs to be a "top agenda item":
http://thinkprogress.org/2008/05/23/mccain-comprehensive-immigration/

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Cindy McCain reports $6 million in 2006 income (AP 5/23/08)
DNC: "laughable" for McCain's camp to "say they are being transparent"
Sen. McCain's wife, Cindy, releases 2006 taxes after saying she would never Shows she earned $6 million in 2006, paid $1.7 million in taxes
She has received an extension on her 2007 tax returns
http://www.cnn.com/2008/POLITICS/05/23/cindy.mccain.taxes.ap/index.html

The Note: In Sickness and in Health (ABC 5/23/08)
By RICK KLEIN with JOHN SANTUCCI
As McCain Divorces Pastors, Baggage is Unloaded in Roughest Week He's Had for a While http://abcnews.go.com/Politics/TheNote/story?id=3105288&page=1

OPINIONS AND EDITORIALS

Worldviews in Need of Merger (Washington Post 5/27/08)
By Richard Cohen; A13
Chris Matthews, in a look of revelation not seen since the late DeMille did biblical epics, said the other day that he is beginning to think a Barack Obama-Hillary Clinton ticket makes sense. Maybe so. But I have an even better ticket in mind: Obama-McCain. That way we might get a sensible foreign policy.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/05/26/AR2008052601739.html

The Frenzy for Campaign Money (NYT 5/27/08)
...Painful contradictions abound. Senator John McCain, who made a career of attacking big-money abuses in politics, has had to send five top campaign aides packing after their lucrative professions as special-interest lobbyists, capital insiders and money bundlers became too embarrassing to ignore. He is keeping on his main strategist, Charles Black, who says he has retired from his lucrative profession as an über-lobbyist for a string of dictators and other unsavory foreign leaders.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/05/27/opinion/27tue1.html?ref=opinion

The Belligerent vs. the Naif? (Washington Post 5/26/08)
By Fred Hiatt; A17
The differences between McCain and Obama may be more about instinct than policy.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/05/25/AR2008052502277.html

McCain drops Hagee (LA Times 5/24/08)
Presidential aspirants are learning the hard way that given some pastors' friendships, they don't need enemies.
http://www.latimes.com/news/opinion/la-ed-mccain24-2008may24,0,186248.story

BUSH NEWS

Bush Straddles His Hard Line in Engaging Sudan (Washington Post 5/27/08)
By Michael Abramowitz; A01
Sometime in the next few weeks, a special envoy of President Bush plans to meet with Sudanese President Omar Hassan al-Bashir, whose government sheltered Osama bin Laden and pursued a scorched-earth policy in southern Sudan that resulted in more than 2 million deaths.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2008/05/26/AR2008052601965.html

Bush Pays Tribute to Troops on Memorial Day (AP 5/26/08)
By DEB RIECHMANN
At Arlington, President Bush salutes America's fighting men and women on Memorial Day http://abcnews.go.com/Politics/wireStory?id=4931808

Mr. Bush and the G.I. Bill (NY Times 5/26/08)
Lavish with other people's sacrifices and reckless in pouring the national treasure into Iraq, President Bush is cheap when it comes to helping people at home.
http://www.nytimes.com/2008/05/26/opinion/26mon1.html?ref=opinion
Link to WH response: http://www.realclearpolitics.com/articles/2008/05/white_house_statement_on_the_n.html

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

OTHER TOP NEWS

Hezbollah Leader Plays Down Group's Political Aims in Lebanon (NYT 5/27/08)

By ROBERT F. WORTH

Hezbollah's leader sought to reassure the Lebanese about the Shiite militant group's intentions in a speech on Monday, saying that its newly expanded political clout will not translate into greater control over the state, and that its top priority remains the fight against Israel.

http://www.nytimes.com/2008/05/27/world/middleeast/27lebanon.html?ref=world

Iran holds back nuclear details, IAEA says (CNN 5/26/08)

* International Atomic Energy Agency inspectors say they can't get clear info from Iran
* The agency has not detected "the actual use of nuclear material" by Iran
* Iran maintains its nuclear ambitions are peaceful http://www.cnn.com/2008/WORLD/meast/05/26/iran.nuclear/index.html

Castro criticizes Obama plan to keep US embargo (AP 5/26/08)

By WILL WEISSERT

Former President Fidel Castro says Sen. Barack Obama's plan to maintain Washington's trade embargo against Cuba will cause hunger and suffering on the island.

http://ap.google.com/article/ALeqM5iEEhT8qNey90fDM8U6FgH5B0WjrgD90TESL80

Obama Says Clinton's RFK Comment Was Merely 'Careless' (Washington Post blog 5/25/08)

By Alec MacGillis

San Juan, P.R. -- Barack Obama spoke publicly today for the first time about Hillary Clinton's invocation of Robert F. Kennedy's assassination, telling a Puerto Rico radio station that he took Clinton's word that she meant no harm.

http://blog.washingtonpost.com/the-trail/2008/05/24/obama_says_clintons_rfk_commen.html

POLLS

Daily Presidential Tracking Poll (Rasmussen 5/26/08)

The Rasmussen Reports daily Presidential Tracking Poll for Monday shows that John McCain and Barack Obama are tied again at 45%. Over the past seven days, the two candidates have been tied or just a single percentage point apart three times. On the other four days, McCain has had an advantage of two points or more http://rasmussenreports.com/public_content/politics/election_20082/2008_presidential_election/daily_presidential_tracking_poll`

Gallup Daily: Clinton Maintains Lead Over McCain (Gallup 5/25/08)

Obama has 5-point lead over Clinton among Democrats... Gallup Poll Daily tracking from May 20-24 finds Hillary Clinton maintaining a significant 49% to 44% lead over John McCain when registered voters are asked about their preferences for the fall general election, while McCain has a slight 47% to 45% advantage over Barack Obama.

http://www.gallup.com/poll/107488/Gallup-Daily-Clinton-Maintains-Lead-Over-McCain.aspx?version=print

Polls: Obama'd beat McCain in Pa., but not Ohio, Florida (McClatchy 5/23/08)

By Steven Thomma

New polls out Thursday show that Hillary Clinton fares better than Barack Obama against John McCain in three key battleground states. The reason: Obama suffers from a defection of Clinton supporters and white working class voters in a fall matchup.

http://www.mcclatchydc.com/254/story/38252.html

--
Sara DuBois
Deputy Director, Tracking/Media Monitoring
Progressive Media USA
sdubois@progressivemediausa.org
202-609-7681 (office)
410-967-7306 (cell)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~

You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.

-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider \(CTRFF\)" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <ctrfriendsfamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 8/15/2014 1:53:08 AM
Subject: Fwd: Correct The Record Friday August 15, 2014 Morning Roundup

Correct The Record Friday August 15, 2014 Morning Roundup:

Headlines:

Washington Post blog: The Fix: "Even with Hillary Clinton in the race, 2016 is basically a toss-up"

"Clinton supporters acknowledge the ground has shifted in recent months. '...as Hillary becomes more involved with domestic issues, as the media begins framing her in terms of a 2016 presidential election and as the Republican attack machine looks for anything and everything to throw at her, it is no surprise that her numbers are coming back to earth,' said Adrienne Elrod, a spokeswoman for the pro-Clinton group Correct the Record."

New York Times: "If Not Hugging It Out, at Least Cutting a Rug"

"This person briefly spotted Mrs. Clinton on the dance floor, but said that Mr. Obama and Mr. Clinton mostly dominated as a 'mosh pit' formed around them."

Washington Post: "The Clintons break bread and build ties with Julian Castro, stoking talk of a 2016 ticket"

"Former president Bill Clinton invited Julian Castro, a former San Antonio mayor and incoming Obama Cabinet secretary, to the Clintons' home in Washington last week for a private dinner that friends described as a chance for Democratic leaders from different generations to become better acquainted."

Huffington Post blog: Amb. Marc Ginsberg: "'Don't Do Stupid Stuff' Doesn't Cut It"

"Say what you will about Mrs. Clinton's spot-on criticism of President Obama's faltering foreign policy -- it reflects widespread bipartisan disapproval that under Obama the ship of state is listing badly in international waters."

Politico Magazine: "Can Hillary Fix Obama's Mess?"

"Uncertain and adrift, Democrats once again need a Willard Hotel moment. They need to find the party's misplaced moral compass and rededicate themselves to defending freedom against its new enemies. And if Hillary Clinton should become their standard-bearer, we should applaud her for raising the right questions—not decry her supposed disloyalty."

Washington Post opinion: Charles Krauthammer: "On Obama's foreign policy, Clinton got it right”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Leave it to Barack Obama’s own former secretary of state to acknowledge the fatal flaw of his foreign policy: a total absence of strategic thinking.”

MSNBC: “Obama: ‘No excuse’ for police violence”

“Clinton, for her part, has also not spoken out on the issue, though as a private citizen, she is not expected to address everything in the news. A spokesperson for Clinton did not respond to a request for comment on the situation in Ferguson.”

Washington Post blog: She The People: “Twitter starting to wonder why Hillary Clinton has not addressed events in Ferguson, Mo.”

“Clinton’s silence has not gone unnoticed on Twitter: [TWO TWEETS]”

Washington Free Beacon: “On Iraq, CAP Chooses Hillary Over Obama”

“Neera Tanden, President of the Center for American Progress, revealed in an interview that the Center supports Hillary Clinton’s views on the handling of Iraq over President Obama’s.”

Weekly Standard blog: The Blog: “Hillary Clinton's Authenticity Problem”

“If it finds a candidate who combines authenticity with a real commitment to reform, the GOP can put up a robust fight to the Clinton Machine.”

Washington Post blog: Post Politics: “Missouri Gov. Jay Nixon stumbled in Ferguson. He’s trying to regain his footing.”

“As a Democrat who can connect with conservatives, Nixon would make an intriguing vice presidential candidate. If Hillary Rodham Clinton decides not to run for president, his name would have been expected to suddenly pop up on many presidential short lists.”

Articles:

Washington Post blog: The Fix: “Even with Hillary Clinton in the race, 2016 is basically a toss-up”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Aaron Blake

August 14, 2014, 1:19 p.m. EDT

It's no big surprise that Hillary Clinton has come back down to earth polling-wise in the last few months. Her stumbles aside, it was basically bound to happen eventually -- for a whole host of reasons.

A new poll from McClatchy and Marist College documents that decline pretty well. In hypothetical matchups with potential 2016 Republican candidates, Clinton has seen her lead decline from 20-plus points in February to the mid-single digits today. She leads Chris Christie by six points after leading him by 21 points six months ago. She leads Jeb Bush 48-41 after leading him by 20 in February. She leads Rand Paul 48-42 after leading him by the same margin early this year.

Here's how that looks:

[GRAPHS]

Clinton supporters acknowledge the ground has shifted in recent months.

"...as Hillary becomes more involved with domestic issues, as the media begins framing her in terms of a 2016 presidential election and as the Republican attack machine looks for anything and everything to throw at her, it is no surprise that her numbers are coming back to earth," said Adrienne Elrod, a spokeswoman for the pro-Clinton group Correct the Record.

Elrod also pointed out that Clinton is still leads all comers. And that's true. It's also true, though, that these polls pretty much show the 2016 presidential race is a toss-up.

Clinton's continued lead, at this point, is pretty clearly a function of her superior name ID. While Clinton wins the votes of 97 percent of "strong Democrats" in all three matchups, Christie and Paul take only 91 percent of "strong Republicans." While Clinton takes 79 percent of "soft Democrats," Paul only takes 65 percent of "soft Republicans." That's largely because these Republicans aren't as well-known to their base.

In all three matchups, Clinton continues to take at least 20 percent of so-called "soft Republicans." That's to her credit, and good on her if she can somehow keep it up. We would wager, though, that as those "soft Republicans" actually get to know Republicans and the GOP's campaign against Clinton begins in earnest, there's no way Clinton will continue to pick off one in five of even the most casual GOP voters. It's just not possible in today's polarized political environment.

As for pure independents-- those who don't really lean toward either party -- they continue to favor Clinton in two of the three matchups. But in all three matchups, around one-third of these voters are undecided. These are the voters that will decide the 2016 election, and there are a lot of them up for grabs. We doubt many of them know much about Rand Paul, Jeb Bush and Chris Christie, even as all of them know who Clinton is.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

At this point in the game, Clinton is so well-known that she's effectively the incumbent, trying to ward off her lesser-known challengers. And, as with an incumbent, to the extent that she's below 50 percent in the polls, it's hard to call her a favorite.

New York Times: “If Not Hugging It Out, at Least Cutting a Rug”

By Amy Chozick

August 14, 2014

[Subtitle:] Hillary Clinton and Obama Attend Party Days After She Criticized Him

The White House on Thursday declined to say whether President Obama and Hillary Rodham Clinton actually hugged at a party the night before on Martha’s Vineyard.

But they did dance.

Bill Clinton kicked things off when he stepped onto an empty dance floor to “I’ll Take You There.” Michelle Obama joined Mr. Clinton, followed by Mr. Obama, who shot a thumbs-up to the band, a local group called the Sultans. Mr. and Mrs. Obama later shared a slow dance to “At Last.”

The party, to celebrate the 70th birthday of Ann Jordan, the wife of Vernon E. Jordan Jr., a longtime Washington lobbyist and friend to the Clintons and the Obamas, drew even more interest than the usual social gathering with a guest list that includes current and former presidents and first ladies.

On Tuesday, Mrs. Clinton, a potential presidential candidate in 2016, called Mr. Obama to assure him that critical remarks she had made about his foreign policy in an interview with The Atlantic were not intended “to attack him, his policies or his leadership.”

In a statement, Mrs. Clinton’s spokesman said she looked forward to “hugging it out” with Mr. Obama at the party for Mrs. Jordan, which was held in a tent set up on the grounds of the Farm Neck Golf Club.

“It was huge smiles and total abandon on the dance floor,” said one person who attended the party. “You’d never know there was any discord.”

This person briefly spotted Mrs. Clinton on the dance floor, but said that Mr. Obama and Mr. Clinton mostly dominated as a “mosh pit” formed around them.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

As the evening went on, and “Blurred Lines” came to a close, the former and current presidents, who famously clashed during the contentious 2008 Democratic primary, danced to Marvin Gaye’s “Got to Give It Up.”

Washington Post: “The Clintons break bread and build ties with Julian Castro, stoking talk of a 2016 ticket”

By Ed O’Keefe and Philip Rucker

August 14, 2014, 3:23 p.m. EDT

As she expands her political network in advance of an expected presidential run, Hillary Rodham Clinton and her husband have been cultivating an important ally who some believe could become her vice presidential running mate.

Former president Bill Clinton invited Julian Castro, a former San Antonio mayor and incoming Obama Cabinet secretary, to the Clintons’ home in Washington last week for a private dinner that friends described as a chance for Democratic leaders from different generations to become better acquainted.

Castro, 39, who is scheduled to be sworn in Monday as secretary of housing and urban development, traveled to New York in July to join Hillary Clinton, as well as Supreme Court Justice Sonia Sotomayor, at a children’s song and dance performance for the Bronx Children’s Museum’s youth arts program.

And in March, Hillary Clinton sat next to Henry Cisneros, who served in her husband’s Cabinet, at a private luncheon in New Mexico, where Cisneros said they discussed Castro and his political future.

“It’s a natural friendship waiting to bloom,” said Cisneros, also a former San Antonio mayor and a longtime family friend and political mentor of Castro and his identical twin brother, Rep. Joaquin Castro (D-Tex.).

Said another person familiar with the discussions, who spoke on the condition of anonymity so as not to alienate either camp, “The Clintons are keeping the Castros very close to them.”

The behind-the-scenes maneuvering illustrates how the Clintons are trying to acclimate themselves into a Democratic Party that has evolved and nurtured new stars in the years since they ceded the stage to Barack Obama in 2008.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

For the Clintons, there are clear advantages to building an alliance with Castro. A young and dynamic figure who broke onto the national scene with his keynote address at the 2012 Democratic National Convention, Castro is arguably the only Hispanic Democrat with a broad following. Although his background as a Mexican American could have broad appeal to Hispanic voters, Castro does not speak fluent Spanish.

Assuming Clinton runs for president, keeping Castro and his brother on her side is key because any sign of wavering in their support of her candidacy during the Democratic primaries could complicate her attempts to court the increasingly influential Hispanic electorate.

Should Clinton win the Democratic nomination, Castro could find himself on Clinton's vice presidential short list. Clinton may face pressure to select a Hispanic running mate, especially considering that the Republican Party could field two Latino presidential candidates, Sens. Marco Rubio (Fla.) and Ted Cruz (Tex.). Other Latino Republicans, including New Mexico Gov. Susana Martinez and Nevada Gov. Brian Sandoval, have been mentioned as potential vice presidential candidates.

"If Hillary Clinton is the nominee, there will be many considerations, but certainly one of them will be the next generation and another one will be the significance of the Latino community," Cisneros said. "Clearly, if you were putting together a list of five people in the country who could potentially be a contributing running mate, you would have to put Julian Castro on that list."

There are benefits for Castro, too, in establishing closer ties to the Clintons. During his third term as mayor, he resigned to join President Obama's Cabinet, a move that close associates said could demonstrate national political experience he would need to be seriously considered for vice president. Even if Clinton bypassed him as a running mate, Castro could land a different high-profile post in her administration should she win or could run for statewide office in Texas with support from the Clinton network.

Castro met Bill Clinton at the family's home on Whitehaven Street NW, just around the corner from the Naval Observatory, the vice president's official residence, for dinner on Aug. 5, when Clinton was in town for the U.S.-Africa Leaders Summit. They were joined by Sandy Berger, a national security adviser in the Clinton administration, and other Clinton associates, said Democrats familiar with the dinner.

Although politics is always in the atmosphere at a dinner for politicians, aides to Clinton and Castro insisted that their discussion centered around joint initiatives between the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Clinton Climate Initiative, one of several philanthropic programs affiliated with the Bill, Hillary and Chelsea Clinton Foundation.

"Secretary Castro and former president Clinton had a discussion about ways the agency can expand on the partnership with the Clinton Climate Initiative to make public housing more energy-efficient," HUD spokeswoman Betsaida Alcantara said.

A Clinton aide, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, made a similar statement and then got to the point: "They didn't talk about 2016."

Berger did not respond to a request for comment.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

A Clinton-Castro pairing has long been the subject of speculation in political circles. When asked in May about the prospect of running on a ticket with Castro or Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D-Mass.), Clinton told ABC's Robin Roberts, "They're both extraordinary leaders and great political advocates for a lot of what needs to be done in our country, and I admire both of them greatly."

The Clinton-Castro relationship dates at least to 2012, when the former president and the Castro brothers appeared together at a political fundraiser in Los Angeles, shortly after Julian Castro's DNC keynote speech. In his remarks at the event, Clinton suggested that Julian would one day be president and that the Castro brothers were building a legacy of public service similar to that of the Kennedys, according to a close associate of both camps who was in attendance.

Since then, the Clintons and Castros have found occasional opportunities to develop a relationship. In February, when Bill Clinton visited San Antonio for a speech to the World Affairs Council, he went to lunch at Mi Tierra, an iconic Tex-Mex restaurant in the city, with Julian Castro, who at the time was still the mayor, as well as Cisneros and San Antonio Spurs coach Gregg Popovich.

The Castro brothers were born in 1974. That was the year a 28-year-old Bill Clinton, fresh out of law school, ran his first campaign, for Congress from Arkansas, as a sort of boy wonder. Twenty years later, Julian Castro was an intern in the Clinton White House, working in the Office of Cabinet Affairs, and he has said he had his picture taken with the president.

"It may well be there's a special affinity there for these early overachievers," said Paul Begala, a longtime Clinton adviser. "President Clinton's got an eye for talent."

Bill Clinton also has a deep affection for Texas and many political friends there after he and Hillary crisscrossed the state in 1972 working for George McGovern's presidential campaign.

In the decades since, Begala said, Clinton has gone to San Antonio whenever he has had a reason. The former president had a taste for mango ice cream from the Menger Hotel, a legendary property near the Alamo where Teddy Roosevelt recruited the Rough Riders.

"Somebody should tell Julian to ship a little mango ice cream up to him," Begala said. Acknowledging the former president's strict diet of late, Begala added, "I don't know if it's vegan."

Huffington Post blog: Amb. Marc Ginsberg: "'Don't Do Stupid Stuff' Doesn't Cut It"

By Amb. Marc Ginsberg

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

August 14, 2014, 5:46 p.m. EDT

It's nice to hear President Obama and Mrs. Clinton had a "huggable" moment on Martha's Vineyard last night. But making up is hard to do when the truth hurts.

Say what you will about Mrs. Clinton's spot-on criticism of President Obama's faltering foreign policy -- it reflects widespread bipartisan disapproval that under Obama the ship of state is listing badly in international waters.

When a whopping 66 percent (an aggregate of three national polls) of the American people do not approve of a president's foreign policy, something is awfully wrong with 1) the policy; 2) the selling of the policy; 3) the staffers formulating the policy. Betting on the remaining 34 percent who approve -- the isolationist fringes of both parties -- represents a dangerous sliver on which to bank a national security legacy.

Yet it seems the White House caters to that fringe element of the electorate, his staff asserting the rest of the world just doesn't appreciate or understand Obama's stewardship. But that's not a foreign policy drowning in misunderstanding -- that's a foreign policy just drowning. "Not doing stupid stuff" is shoddy Noble Peace Prize material -- and the public senses it.

Obama and his national security team forget (or more likely don't seem to care) that unless they urgently correct course they will bequeath the ballast of a tarnished national security legacy that will haunt the Democratic Party for years to come. Recall it took over a decade for the Democratic Party to cure itself of Jimmy Carter's foreign policy hangover when Bill Clinton established such an acclaimed and respected foreign policy that it earned him such high marks at home and abroad and is one of the thousand reasons he is so admired.

True, the world is full of horrific images and heartbreaking stories -- from Ukraine, Gaza, West Africa, and Mt. Sinjar. Watching international news is painful. And as Obama correctly points out, the U.S. cannot fix every dire mess. No nation can do it alone. But forging "coalitions of the willing" is not this White House's default position before a crisis may require boots on the ground (as long it is foreign boots, of course). Moreover, Republicans have not cut Obama a break -- the more Obama opposes "boots on the ground" the more "boots on the ground" they demand.

But Obama is selling the public short -- even if they scorn more foreign military adventures, they do expect a president to lead with conviction and resolve, and not be seen like he is always late for the train. Americans know sometimes boots have to be on the ground to fulfill limited missions and protect the homeland. There were boots on the ground last night on Mt. Sinjar rescuing terrified Yazidi refugees. There are over 900 boots on the ground in Iraq, and counting. Americans see ISIS as a growing threat to allies in the Middle East and to the homeland. It is attacking Lebanon and now Jordan. They know that genocide is occurring everywhere ISIS plunders -- on Mt. Sinjar and off of it and they expect the U.S. to lead by forging a coalition to stop ISIS in its tracks. ISIS has been on the march for months. You would think that had the terrible images coming from Mt. Sinjar not been seen in Washington the ISIS genocide against thousands of Shiites and Christians would have been inconvenient truths for this White House to cover its eyes to BECAUSE IT COULD MEAN BOOTS ON THE GROUND.

Obama and his fatigued staff blame the pile on their critics -- not themselves. But critics are not responsible for the color blind red lines, the blurred pivots, the belated rescue missions, or the stupid eavesdropping and spying on allies. And when it suits him, Obama just gives a back of the hand when challenged on major policy decisions that come back to bite him.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

On Saturday, August 9, President Obama told Tom Friedman that it is a "fantasy" to believe that arming secular Syrians early on would have made a difference. That is a perfect example of Obama revising history to silence his critics without any facts to substantiate that claim of"fantasy" when he reversed himself a year later. He rejected the case presented to him by Mrs. Clinton and SecDef Gates when it could have mattered, and when he finally decided to provided lethal aid to the "better" rebels, it was too late. Whose "fantasy" is it?

What was really a fantasy was Obama's Syrian red line. As much as his staff would like to sweep it under the rug his failed Syria policy created the greatest single national security credibility crisis in his entire presidency -- the so-called Red Line Assad crossed without much of a consequence. Assad was still able to blow his people up to smithereens with barrel bombs. The experts whose advise to cure the Syrian cold before it became the flu were sidelined and then quit, like former U.S. Ambassador to Syria Robert Ford, who is scathing in his criticism of this White House's political agenda at the expense of national security.

Events have consistently vindicated Mrs. Clinton time and again as the Syrian crisis unfolded. She was steadfast in her determination to come to the humanitarian rescue of millions of Syrian refugees when Obama considered it a slippery slope to "boots on the ground."

Had the U.S. acted more quickly, tens of thousands of Syrians could have been saved from the conflict. The White House dragged its feet for months before agreeing to dispatch a USAID survey team to assess the humanitarian crisis -- "gotta keep those boots from getting on the ground!"

I know from Turkish diplomats the following nugget. In March, 2013, Turkey's foreign minister Ahmet Davotuglu flew into Washington to urgently meet with then SecState Clinton to coordinate a plan to create humanitarian corridor "no fly zones" over Syria and to lay the groundwork to provide non-lethal intel support to the moderate Free Syrian Army forces. Mrs. Clinton's team had labored for months to align Washington and Ankara in order to ensure that when she arrived in Istanbul for a Friends of Syria meeting, the U.S. would unveil an effective," no boots on the ground" plan.

Just before wheels up from Andrews. The White House pulled the plug on Mrs. Clinton; who arrived in Istanbul scrambling to undo the damage the national security staff had just inflicted on its bilateral credibility with Turkey and with other Middle East nations attending the conference. All they were trying to do was attempting to forge a reasonable, moderate coalition against the Assad regime and to try to come to the aid of millions of destitute, homeless and starving Syrian refugees.

It mattered not to Obama's White House staff that it had just sucker-punched itself in the eye (again). Anything that smacked of "engagement" in Syria violated the "no boots on the ground" political dictate.

You would think Obama would want to correct his course. But the status quo is his want. It's the critics after all who are at fault.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Still, for the sake of his presidency, how about bringing onto his White House staff seasoned national security experts who know how to forge coalitions, are good special emissaries, who have credibility and trust with regional leaders, who can formulate strategy instead of reacting tactically to events.

The American people would be shocked if they knew that there is no one senior on the national security staff who has long-term, hands-on Middle East experience advising this president given the enormous national security challenges we face in the Middle East.

That is the difference between Mrs. Clinton and President Obama. She was not threatened by seasoned, respected world class diplomats like Richard Holbrooke or George Mitchell. She welcomed top talent and the constructive insights and advice from her top foreign service officers. She brought in experts and forged allies in Congress and with other cabinet officers.

That is not the case with this White House. In the tight circle around this president there is no room for anyone who may challenge the political pecking order inside the NSC.

The American people deserve a foreign policy they can be proud of. Democrats deserve a foreign policy they can run on. That means "Doing the Best Stuff" instead of "Don't Do Stupid Stuff."

Politico Magazine: “Can Hillary Fix Obama’s Mess?”

By Will Marshall

August 14, 2014

On Barack Obama’s watch, Democrats have defined their international outlook largely in reactive and negative terms. The president has focused on fixing his predecessor’s mistakes, leaving unclear what positive role he envisions for America in the 21st century. “Don’t Do Stupid Stuff” may be sound advice for college-bound kids, but it’s not a foreign policy doctrine.

Where George W. Bush reached too quickly for the blunt instrument of military force, Obama stresses its limited utility for solving complex political problems. Bush’s “Freedom Agenda” had a utopian and triumphalist ring; Obama eschews moralizing and puts human rights and democracy on the diplomatic backburner. Bush’s unilateralism strained ties with key U.S. allies, Obama is only too happy to lead from behind and shift responsibility for solving global problems to multilateral coalitions.

And, given the economic mess he inherited, and the need to repair the domestic foundations of U.S. strength, it’s understandable that Obama has sought to limit America’s exposure to foreign conflicts.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Six years into his tenure, however, the world doesn't seem to be cooperating with Obama's policy of risk-averse retrenchment. Russia has reverted to its bad old ways, resurrecting a Soviet-style police state and menacing its neighbors. Europe's inability to respond effectively has forced Obama to put America back in the business of checking Moscow's aggression. Washington also is getting sucked back into Iraq, dashing the president's hopes of extricating the United States from a Middle East convulsed by jihadist and sectarian violence.

The president's desire to pull back from foreign conflicts may mirror the public's mood, but polls suggest it hasn't inspired much confidence in his ability to counter emerging threats. "Great nations need organizing principles, and 'Don't do stupid stuff' is not an organizing principle," Hillary Clinton said in her Atlantic interview—much to the consternation of White House Munchkins who flamed her anonymously in the New York Times, and Obama consigliere David Axelrod, who fired back a snarky tweet.

But Democrats would be wiser to accept Clinton's implicit challenge to talk more about the positive uses of American power. Much of the world now believes that a declining America is abandoning its leadership role. Is that what Democrats believe? For six decades, Democratic leaders have acted upon the premise that a freer world is a safer and more prosperous world. Is this core tenet of post-war internationalism still operative?

It's hard for Democrats to answer these questions when their leader oscillates awkwardly between a pinched "realism" concerned mainly with avoiding mistakes, and his party's more expansive legacy of liberal internationalism. As one former U.S. official recently told the New Yorker, "I think Obama is basically a realist – but he feels bad about it."

Nowhere is Obama's ambivalence more evident than in Syria, where the president decided to stand aloof from a popular uprising even after insisting that President Bashar al-Assad must go. His reluctance to intervene was undeniably popular and won warm praise from a motley collection of anti-interventionists that includes libertarians, conservative realists and the anti-war left.

But progressive dissenters, including then Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, challenged it on strategic grounds. The Syrian debacle shows that nonintervention entails risks and costs too. These include some 170,000 dead, millions of refugees flooding neighboring states and spreading sectarian violence across the region. Worst of all, Syria has become a magnet for foreign jihadis seeking to fill what Clinton aptly called the "vacuum" created by the West's failure to arm and support moderate opponents of the Assad dictatorship. Forged in the Syrian crucible was the Islamic State, which now controls territory larger than New England and is menacing Kurdistan and the rest of Iraq.

This sinister turn of events upends a key Obama assumption about the terrorist threat. He has often criticized Bush's talk of a "war on terror" as overly broad, arguing plausibly that it fed the extremist narrative that America is at war with Islam. But in fixating on al Qaeda, Obama seems to have erred in the opposite direction. The rise of the Islamic State—so savage that even al Qaeda chief Ayman al-Zawahari has disowned it—makes it clear that the recurrent danger we face arises not from this terrorist group or that, but the Islamist ideology that motivates all of them.

Yet America, Clinton noted, lacks an "overarching strategy" for containing and ultimately defeating the jihadist contagion that has spread to Yemen, Somalia, North and sub-Saharan Africa, Pakistan, the Caucuses, parts of China and the Philippines. Obama has been so eager to declare an end to America's overseas wars that he has not prepared Americans for a long twilight struggle against Islamist extremism across shifting global fronts. This campaign may not require putting U.S. boots on the ground—the straw man Obama routinely torches in answer to his critics. But it will very likely require the use of force, probably by drones, special forces and the covert services.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Fortunately, Americans need not wage this campaign alone. Washington should be organizing a coalition of powers likewise concerned about jihadist terrorism, powers—including Europe, Russia, China, India, Turkey and Egypt—to concert action on intelligence and surveillance of extremist groups, monitor “hot spots” for jihadist recruiting and disrupt terrorist financing networks.

The United States also needs a more sophisticated information campaign, in collaboration with moderate Muslim allies, to counter the extremist narrative and delegitimate Islamist ideology. The Cold War offers useful precedents for this kind of “hearts and mind” operation.

Like communism and fascism, radical Islam is a totalitarian creed. It is fundamentally hostile to liberal concepts of individualism, liberty of conscience, pluralism and tolerance. The civilized world can’t coexist with a retrograde doctrine that sanctions barbaric violence against nonbelievers, that kills and abducts girls for going to school, that suppresses women’s sexuality and rights, and that prescribes death for adultery and homosexuality.

Why aren’t U.S. liberals leading the charge against this deeply illiberal ideology? The fear of being called anti-Muslim is one answer. Another is the anti-war’s left reflexive aversion to the use of the force and mistrust of American motives. Some “peace” groups, for example, have lambasted Obama for ordering air strikes against the Islamic State, even to protect thousands of Yazidis and Christians threatened with mass slaughter. Echoing a canard from the Iraq war debate, some critics say it’s all about oil—in this case protecting U.S. oil interests in friendly Kurdistan.

More creditable is sheer public weariness with shouldering the Atlas-like burdens of world leadership, especially after a prolonged period of anemic growth and stalled economic mobility at home.

Still, Democrats ought to push back against the current mood for disengagement, not pander to it. They should reclaim their party’s tradition of tough liberalism and reaffirm America’s will to stand up to tyranny and oppression. Much of that tradition shines through in Hillary Clinton’s comments.

Not surprisingly, Karl Rove mocked Clinton’s words as an attempt to “position herself as sort of the Goldilocks of foreign policy.” But there is much wisdom in her search for a via media between the bluster and overreaching of Rove’s former boss and Obama’s realist overcorrection.

There’s an historical precedent for this kind of synthesis. In January 1947, a group of prominent Democrats—including such liberal icons as Reinhold Niebuhr, Arthur Schlesinger Jr. Eleanor Roosevelt and Walter Reuther—gathered at Washington’s Willard Hotel. They were motivated by twin concerns: that conservatives would use a new “Red Scare” to clamp down on civil liberties, and that too many progressives were drifting into Henry Wallace’s fellow traveling camp. They urged liberals to lead the fight against Soviet totalitarianism and support “democratic and freedom-loving peoples the world over.” Calling themselves Americans for Democratic Action, they give birth to liberal anti-communism.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Defense of freedom, Schlesinger wrote in The Vital Center, should be the “fighting faith” of American liberalism. The fight for liberal values abroad, he argued, was indivisible from the struggle for social progress at home.

That link and that faith seem to be attenuated, if not lost, today—buried in the sands of Iraq and the wreckage of the 2008 financial crisis. It’s no longer clear how or even if Democrats related their foreign policy goals to what they want to accomplish domestically.

Uncertain and adrift, Democrats once again need a Willard Hotel moment. They need to find the party’s misplaced moral compass and rededicate themselves to defending freedom against its new enemies. And if Hillary Clinton should become their standard-bearer, we should applaud her for raising the right questions—not decry her supposed disloyalty.

Once, Democratic presidents like Harry Truman, John F. Kennedy and Bill Clinton took a more expansive view of America’s role as leading the world toward greater openness, liberty and democracy. They were tough-minded liberals who understood that U.S. diplomacy works best when backed by military strength and the credible threat of force. At the same time, they saw the nation’s liberal ideals as a potent source of moral authority, helping to legitimate U.S. global leadership at home and internationally. It’s time to bring that spirit back.

Wall Street Journal column: Peggy Noonan: “The 2016 Battle Heats Up Already”

By Peggy Noonan

August 14, 2014, 7:23 p.m. EDT

I think things just got sparky, a term I once heard a military figure use to denote a battle that has both commenced and turned hot.

In her interview in The Atlantic, with Jeffrey Goldberg, Hillary Clinton sounded as burly and hawkish on foreign policy as John McCain. That's not a surprise to longtime Hillary observers, though that she chose to declare it so uncompromisingly at so early a point in the 2016 presidential cycle, is. Mrs. Clinton came into politics from the McGovern wing of her party, but that was long ago. She has been more publicly hawkish since she ran for the U.S. Senate in New York in 2000 and 9/11 happened a year later. She famously voted for the Iraq war, which opened up running room for a young man named Barack Obama.

Everyone knew that Mrs. Clinton would have to detach herself politically from Mr. Obama, an increasingly unpopular president. But she was his secretary of state for four years, so the distancing would have to be done with some deftness and delicacy, and deeper into the election cycle, not now. Instead, it was done with blunt force. In the interview Mrs. Clinton went square at the president's foreign-policy vision, or lack of it. "Great nations need organizing principles, and 'Don't do stupid stuff,' is not an organizing principle." This is both true and well stated, but it is remarkable to hear it from, again, a person who until February 2013 was his secretary of state, presumably an intimate and part of the creation of his foreign policy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Just as remarkable, by throwing down this gauntlet Mrs. Clinton starts an argument within her party that might have been inevitable but certainly could have been delayed and, with pleas for unity, softened. By starting the argument now she gives time, space and reason for a progressive Democratic opponent to arise.

***

The 2016 Democratic presidential cycle has begun with this interview and has begun early.

The tone and content of Mrs. Clinton's remarks seem to assume a Democratic Party base that is or will prove to be in broad agreement with her hawkishness.

But is that the feeling of a major portion of the Democratic Party base right now?

You can see the progressive pushback in David Axelrod's remarks when he took to Twitter to remind Mrs. Clinton that stupid stuff "means stuff like occupying Iraq in the first place, which was a tragically bad decision." The Obama White House is reportedly angered by Mrs. Clinton's remarks. Left-wing websites have taken issue with her.

Mrs. Clinton was always going to have a challenger or challengers for the party's nomination, and in fact needed one: She needs someone to beat for the nomination, she can't just glide to it. At the same time it was in her interest to own a lot of political ground and give no big stark issue to the left. But she's given them one now, and she is probably going to get a bigger challenge than she thinks.

Who might it be? Democrats are suddenly full of names—that itself is significant, they weren't a few weeks ago—but the first person who always comes to mind could cause Mrs. Clinton a lot of trouble.

In a smart piece in The Washington Monthly, writer David Paul Kuhn takes a look at Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren and reminds the political class not to write her off and not to assume that her stated position up to now—that she does not intend to run for president—will hold.

Mr. Kuhn notes that Ms. Warren has a powerful appeal among the party's activist left. Her rhetoric is pure firebrand: "The game is rigged . . . and the rich and powerful have lobbyists and lawyers and plenty of friends in Congress." She draws big, enthusiastic crowds. Mr. Kuhn quotes Democratic campaign veteran Joe Trippi, who suggests things may be more dynamic than they look: "The progressive wing is looking for a candidate." With Hillary, as they say, Democrats are falling in line but not in love.

Yes, Mrs. Clinton is the favorite; yes, she has the money, the clout, the stature, fame and relationships. But she's no populist, and populism is rising. Hillary is close to Wall Street; they're her friends, her donors, they hire her for big ticket appearances. Ms. Warren has no use for Wall Street; they're the ones who crashed the economy and got away with it. Mr. Kuhn notes that Ms. Warren's signature line—the game is rigged—is no longer radical; it is the view of 6 in 10 Americans in some polls that our economic system unfairly favors the wealthy.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ms. Warren would also take Hillary's most powerful argument—that it's time for a woman president and she is an accomplished woman—off the table.

I'd add two points.

One is that Ms. Warren has the hard-to-quantify power of the person who means it. She's a real leftist, she didn't get it from a poll. Second, though Ms. Warren and Hillary are almost the same age (65 and 66, respectively) they represent two wholly different political experiences. They are of different Democratic generations.

Hillary is a post-Reagan liberal. Her generation of liberalism was defined by a reckoning with and accommodation to popular modern conservatism.

Ms. Warren is a post-crash progressive. She came to politics during and after the financial crisis of 2008, and her political message was shaped by it. To some in the base Ms. Warren may seem fresher, more pertinent.

As for her repeated statements that she does not plan to run for the presidency in 2016, Mr. Kuhn notes that Barack Obama said things like that in the years before 2008. Then he ran.

***

On the Republican side, of course, no one's certain who's running; some of those who think they might won't, some who think they won't might. But, as a smart party veteran said the other day, the primaries could in time turn into Rand Paul Versus the Guy Who Isn't Rand Paul, the guy who stands for a greater perceived moderation.

But what if the nominee were Rand Paul? And he went up against Mrs. Clinton? The Kentucky senator would, presumably, be to her left on foreign policy. That would be historic enough. But what would the GOP's establishmentarians, its money men and opinion shapers, do if the 2016 election came down to Mr. Paul versus a more moderate-seeming Hillary? They just might choose Mrs. Clinton. Bolt the party, or sit this one out.

We could see a rising populist candidate pretty much split the Democratic Party this year, and a rising libertarian one pretty much split the Republicans.

Yes, we are getting ahead of ourselves. No, this is not where you'd put your money, in part because it's too dramatic, and when you expect history to get dramatic it often doesn't, just as when you don't it sometimes does.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But only months ago people were thinking 2016 might be ho-hum, a Bush versus a Clinton, with mournful commentary about the decadence of America's acceptance of political dynasties. Maybe it will be sparkier than that. And maybe the sparkiness began this week, with that interview in The Atlantic.

Washington Post opinion: Charles Krauthammer: "On Obama's foreign policy, Clinton got it right"

By Charles Krauthammer

August 14, 2014, 9:07 p.m. EDT

"Great nations need organizing principles, and 'Don't do stupid stuff' is not an organizing principle."

— Hillary Clinton, The Atlantic, Aug. 10

Leave it to Barack Obama's own former secretary of state to acknowledge the fatal flaw of his foreign policy: a total absence of strategic thinking.

Yes, of course everything Hillary Clinton says is positioning. The last time she sought the nomination (2008), as she admitted before Defense Secretary Bob Gates, she opposed the Iraq surge for political reasons because she was facing antiwar Sen. Barack Obama in Iowa. Now, as she prepares for her next run (2016), she's positioning herself to the right because, with no prospect of being denied the Democratic nomination, she has the luxury of running toward the center two years before Election Day.

All true, but sincere or not — with the Clintons how can you ever tell? — it doesn't matter. She's right.

Mind you, Obama does deploy grand words proclaiming grand ideas: the "new beginning" with Islam declared in Cairo, the reset with Russia announced in Geneva, global nuclear disarmament proclaimed in Prague (and playacted in a Washington summit). But, untethered from reality, they all disappeared without a trace.

When carrying out policies in the real world, however, it's nothing but tactics and reactive improvisation. The only consistency is the president's inability (unwillingness?) to see the big picture. Consider:

1. Russia

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Vladimir Putin has 45,000 troops on the Ukraine border. A convoy of 262 unwanted, unrequested, uninspected Russian trucks allegedly with humanitarian aid is headed to Ukraine to relieve the pro-Russian separatists now reduced to the encircled cities of Donetsk and Luhansk. Ukraine threatens to stop it.

Obama's concern? He blithely tells the New York Times that Putin "could invade" Ukraine at any time. And if he does, says Obama, "trying to find our way back to a cooperative functioning relationship with Russia during the remainder of my term will be much more difficult."

Is this what Obama worries about? A Russian invasion would be a singular violation of the post-Cold War order, a humiliating demonstration of American helplessness and a shock to the Baltic republics, Poland and other vulnerable U.S. allies. And Obama is concerned about his post-invasion relations with Putin?

2. Syria

To this day, Obama seems not to understand the damage he did to American credibility everywhere by slinking away from his own self-proclaimed red line on Syrian use of chemical weapons.

He seems equally unaware of the message sent by his refusal to arm the secular opposition (over the objections of Secretary of State Clinton, Defense Secretary Leon Panetta and CIA Director David Petraeus) when it was still doable. He ridicules the idea as "fantasy" because we'd be arming amateurs up against a well-armed government "backed by Russia, backed by Iran [and] a battle-hardened Hezbollah."

He thus admits that Russian and other outside support was crucial to tilting the outcome of this civil war to Bashar al-Assad. Yet he dismisses countervailing U.S. support as useless. He thus tells the world of his disdain for the traditional U.S. role of protecting friends by deterring and counterbalancing adversarial outside powers.

3. Gaza

Every moderate U.S. ally in the Middle East welcomed the original (week 1) Egyptian cease-fire offer. They were stunned when the Obama's secretary of state then met with Qatar and Turkey — Hamas' lawyers — promoting its demands. Did Obama not understand he was stymieing a tacit and remarkable pan-Arab-Israeli alliance to bring down Hamas (a branch of the Muslim Brotherhood) — itself an important U.S. strategic objective?

The definitive evidence of Obama's lack of vision is his own current policy reversals — a clear admission of failure. He backed the next Egyptian cease-fire. He's finally arming the Syrian rebels. And he's returning American military power to Iraq. (On Russia, however, he appears unmovably unmoved.)

Tragically, his proposed $500 million package for secular Syrian rebels is too late. Assad has Aleppo, their last major redoubt, nearly surrounded. If and when it falls, the revolution may be over.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The result? The worst possible outcome: A land divided between the Islamic State (IS) and Assad, now wholly owned by Iran and Russia.

Iraq is also very little, very late. Why did Obama wait seven months after the IS takeover of Fallujah and nine weeks after the capture of Mosul before beginning supplying the Kurds with desperately needed weapons?

And why just small arms supplied supposedly clandestinely through the CIA? The Kurds are totally outgunned. Their bullets are bouncing off the captured armored Humvees the IS has deployed against them. The Pentagon should be conducting a massive airlift to provide the pesh merga with armored vehicles, anti-tank missiles and other heavier weaponry.

And why the pinprick airstrikes? The IS-Kurdish front is 600 miles long, more than the distance between Boston and Washington. The Pentagon admits that the current tactics — hitting an artillery piece here, a truck there — will not affect the momentum of the IS or the course of the war.

But then again, altering the course of a war would be a strategic objective. That seems not to be in Obama's portfolio.

MSNBC: "Obama: 'No excuse' for police violence"

By Alex Seitz-Wald

August 14, 2014, 2:09 p.m. EDT

President Obama on Thursday came out strongly against the spiraling unrest and heavy-handed police tactic in Ferguson, Missouri, where tear gas and smoke grenades were thrown as peaceful protesters rallied over the killing of unarmed teen Michael Brown.

The president took a break from his vacation on Martha's Vineyard to vow that justice will be served in last weekend's police shooting and also said it was against American values to arrest reporters.

While he said there is no excuse for violence against police officers, he also said there is "no excuse for police to use force against a peaceful protest." He added: "Here in the United States of the American, police should not be arresting or bullying journalists." Two reporters were briefly detained Wednesday night.

Obama said he understands why Americans are "deeply disturbed" by images of clashes between militarized police and protesters, and that he's directed the Department of Justice to not only investigate the killing of Michael Brown, but also to consult with local authorities on less provocative ways to maintain public safety.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Now is the time for healing. Now is the time for peace and calm on the streets of Ferguson. Now is the time for an open and transparent process to see that justice is done,” Obama concluded.

But the president did not heed calls from members of his own party to make a radical change. Congressman John Lewis – a recognized leader of the Civil Rights Movement – spoke out Thursday saying Obama should use the authority of his office to declare martial law to “federalize the Missouri national guard to protect people as they protest.”

The White House is fending off charges that it was too slow to respond to the rapidly deteriorating situation in Missouri. It did not look good Wednesday night as Obama partied at a golf resort on tony Martha’s Vineyard while the heartland burned. The juxtaposition of tear gas canisters and riot gear on one hand, with Obama’s surf and turf menu and boasts of all-night dancing on the other came in for quick condemnation on social media.

Late Wednesday night, a White House spokesperson tweeted about Obama seeing Hillary Clinton at the party, after some tensions between the two. It was something which seemed so important only a few hours earlier, but suddenly looked hopelessly frivolous – “spoiler alert: a good time was had by all,” the spokesperson said – as violent clashes continued.

Just hours earlier, at a press briefing Wednesday afternoon, White House spokesperson Eric Schultz got 14 questions about Clinton and Obama’s upcoming meeting, including several about journalists’ access to the party. He got just one on the situation in Ferguson.

Other political leaders were apparently caught off guard as well.

Missouri Gov. Jay Nixon, who has been criticized for what some feel is a lackluster response, promised residents Thursday morning that they would soon see “a much better and much different tone” from police. The St. Louis County police force has been relieved of duty, and Nixon said details about a new order would be announced at a press conference this afternoon.

“I’m sorry I was late – I do have a good excuse,” Nixon told attendees at a local church. “I was on the phone with the President of the United States.”

In his remarks, Obama called Nixon “a good man and a fine governor,” and suggested he was counting on the executive to take charge of the situation. “I expressed my concern over the violent turn that events have taken on the ground,” Obama said.

At the meeting with residents in the church in Ferguson, the moderator told Nixon, “You are the governor of the ‘Show Me State,’ and we have decided that we’re going to test this tonight.”

The state’s Democratic Senator, Claire McCaskill, also met with constituents in Ferguson on Thursday and said she has spoken with Department of Justice officials about an investigation. McCaskill, herself a former prosecutor, said in a statement that “we need to de-militarize this situation – this kind of response the police has become the problem instead of the solution."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton, for her part, has also not spoken out on the issue, though as a private citizen, she is not expected to address everything in the news. A spokesperson for Clinton did not respond to a request for comment on the situation in Ferguson.

Washington Post blog: She The People: "Twitter starting to wonder why Hillary Clinton has not addressed events in Ferguson, Mo."

By Vanessa Williams and Bethonie Butler

August 14, 2014, 3:53 p.m. EDT

Hillary Clinton has had much to say of late about foreign policy, drawing a great deal of coverage for an interview in which she pointed out her differences with President Obama on how he has handled crises around the world.

Analysts suggest that she is signaling to a general election electorate where she disagrees with the currently unpopular Obama on issues important to them, should she decide to run for president in 2016.

Closer to home, however, Clinton has yet to say anything about the events in Ferguson, Mo., which has exploded into protests – both peaceful and violent – since the weekend shooting of Michael Brown, an unarmed 18-year-old African American.

But Elizabeth Warren, the woman being pushed by progressives as an alternative to Clinton, has:

[TWEET]

And on the GOP side, Rand Paul, often touted as a potential Republican candidate in 2016, wrote an op-ed published Thursday by Time magazine in which he forcefully questions the police response to mostly black protesters in Ferguson. The forceful essay in Time weighed in with this lengthy response to what can be rightfully called a domestic crisis, touching on longstanding, simmering issues of race and the use of deadly force by police.

Clinton's silence has not gone unnoticed on Twitter:

[TWO TWEETS]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

She The People sought comment from Clinton on the events in Ferguson, but has not received a reply. We will update this post when we do.

Washington Free Beacon: "On Iraq, CAP Chooses Hillary Over Obama"

By Washington Free Beacon Staff

August 14, 2014, 6:22 p.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] 'The American public has become so isolationist that in the long term it may create more chaos'

Neera Tanden, President of the Center for American Progress, revealed in an interview that the Center supports Hillary Clinton's views on the handling of Iraq over President Obama's.

Tanden appeared on RealClearPolitics' Carl Cannon's show, "Changing Lanes," during which she made the admission.

"…It seems to me an independent voter could say… 'Invading Iraq was a mistake, but leaving Iraq was a mistake.' They could say both things," Cannon told Tanden.

She threw her support behind Clinton's views about going forward, replying "My view of it is: we cannot stay in Iraq forever…But that doesn't mean you shouldn't have taken another course in Syria, or you shouldn't be supporting Jordan, or you shouldn't be taking steps now to support the Yazidis who are clinging to life on the mountaintops because of the kind of genocidal efforts of ISIL."

Tanden expressed her concern over the negative views of the Iraq war. "I worry that that has so colored our view that we want to retreat…I think the American public has become so isolationist that in the long-term it may create more chaos in the world, not less," she said.

It should be noted, The Center for American Progress' founder, John Podesta, is now President Obama's Chief of Staff.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Weekly Standard blog: The Blog: “Hillary Clinton's Authenticity Problem”

By Jay Cost

August 15, 2014, 12:00 a.m. EDT

A friend of mine and I were discussing Hillary Clinton’s putative presidential candidacy over email, and he flagged for me a YouTube video of a debate from the fall of 2007. In it, Tim Russert queried her thusly:

“Senator Clinton, Governor of New York Eliot Spitzer has proposed giving driver’s licenses to illegal immigrants. You told the Nashua, N.H., editorial board it makes a lot of sense. Why does it make a lot of sense to give an illegal immigrant a driver’s license?”

To which Clinton responded:

“Well, what Governor Spitzer is trying to do is fill the vacuum left by the failure of this administration to bring about comprehensive immigration reform.

“We know in New York we have several million at any one time who are in New York illegally. They are undocumented workers. They are driving on our roads. The possibility of them having an accident that harms themselves or others is just a matter of the odds. It’s probability. So what Governor Spitzer is trying to do is to fill the vacuum.

“I believe we need to get back to comprehensive immigration reform because no state, no matter how well intentioned, can fill this gap. There needs to be federal action on immigration reform. ...”

Okay, fair enough. The basic gist seems to be: I support driver’s licenses for illegal immigrants with reluctance. It is a public safety issue and, absent federal action, governors have a responsibility to do something about it.

This prompted Chris Dodd, the “Friend of Angelo,” to go on the attack. Dodd argued that driver’s licenses are a privilege, not a right, and they should not be given to anybody here illegally.

Again, fair enough. That seems like a clear contrast for primary voters. If you care about this issue and want illegal immigrants to have licenses, Clinton is your candidate. If not, consider Dodd.

But then Clinton just had to interject:

“I just want to add, I did not say that it should be done, but I certainly recognize why Governor Spitzer is trying to do it.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Wait...what? I thought she was in favor of it. Now, she isn't. But then Dodd pushed back:

"(A) driver's license goes too far, in my view."

And then Clinton again defends Spitzer's move:

"Well, you may say that, but what is the identification if somebody runs into you today who is an undocumented worker…"

After a bit more back-and-forth, Russert interjects with this pointed question:

"Senator Clinton, I just want to make sure what I heard. Do you, the New York Senator Hillary Clinton, support the New York governor's plan to give illegal immigrants a driver's license? You told the Nashua, N.H., paper it made a lot of sense."

To which the senator from New York...objected in principle to the question:

"You know, Tim, this is where everybody plays gotcha."

Then she once again tried to split the difference:

"It makes a lot of sense. What is the governor supposed to do? He is dealing with a serious problem. We have failed, and George Bush has failed.

"Do I think this is the best thing for any governor to do? No. But do I understand the sense of real desperation, trying to get a handle on this? Remember, in New York we want to know who's in New York. We want people to come out of the shadows. He's making an honest effort to do it. We should have passed immigration reform."

This episode generated some bad press for Clinton back in 2007, and I bring it up now because it is essentially the same as her positioning this week on Obama's foreign policy. She gives a hard-hitting interview to the Atlantic that seems to put some distance between the president and herself, then calls him to assure him there is no such distance. She wants it both ways.

I am also reminded of her interview with NPR's Terry Gross over gay marriage. In it, she admits to having evolved as public opinion did, but that she did not do so for political purposes. And she cannot help but complain about the "gotcha" nature of the question (seeing as how NPR hosts are always so tough on Democratic presidential candidates).

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I am also reminded of her ever-shifting explanation of her vote to authorize war in Iraq. Unlike her 2008 competitor John Edwards, she refused to repudiate that vote, instead arguing implausibly that it was a vote to facilitate diplomacy, even though she voted against an amendment to the resolution that would have required more diplomacy.

Wanting to be all things to all people does not make Hillary Clinton a bad person. It makes her a politician. Her husband, famously, has this quality. As Daniel Halper reports in Clinton, Inc., Clinton's obsessive desire to be adored by all prompted him to make amends with even his most intense enemies, like the late Richard Mellon Scaife.

Hillary Clinton's problem is political, not ethical. Unlike her husband, she seems to have a real problem taking both sides of an issue with any sort of eloquence. Her answers are clunky, stilted, and obviously calculated. And after she is called out on said calculation, she is prone to complain about how unfair the question is.

Of course, Mitt Romney had this problem as well, although he was less likely to snap at the questioner. So also did John Kerry, whose line "I actually did vote for the $87 billion, before I voted against it," remains a classic in political doublespeak.

For all intents and purposes, Hillary Clinton is running for president right this very minute. Her book is part of the campaign. So were her interviews with NPR and the Atlantic. Assuming she wins the nomination of her party, she will be campaigning for the next 26-and-a-half months. How will this quality of hers wear? Probably not very well. Voters do not like this kind of doublespeak, or—perhaps better put—they prefer the politician do it with a bit of style and grace. If Bill Clinton, for instance, explained why he flip-flopped on middle class tax cuts between the 1992 campaign and his 1993 budget, his audience might conclude that the only principled move on Clinton's part was to repudiate his prior position. While Bill Clinton comes off much better than he substantially is, Hillary Clinton somehow manages to come across substantially worse. After all, which Democratic pol did not follow the trade winds on gay marriage—and yet Hillary Clinton is the one who looks like a hack for her calculation.

This gives conservatives an opportunity. In this week's edition of the magazine, I argued that the GOP must embrace wholeheartedly the banner of reform to oppose Clinton. Here, I'd add another quality for Republican candidates: earnestness.

I'm reminded of an explanation from a congressmen to political scientist Richard Fenno about how the former can win over constituents who disagree with him:

"It's a weird thing how you get a district to the point where you can vote the way you want to without getting scalped for doing it. I guess you do it in two ways. You come back here a lot and let people see you, so they get a feel for you. And, secondly, I go out of my way to disagree with people or specific issues. That way, they know you aren't trying to snow them. And when you vote against their views, they'll say, 'Well, he's got his reasons.' They'll trust you. I think that's it. If they trust you, you can vote the way you want, and it won't hurt."

Fenno's study of House members in their home districts was completed in the late 1970s, long before public opinion polling, focus grouping, etc., had penetrated so deeply into the fabric of American politics.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Virtually no pollster or strategist would agree with this today. Instead, they'd encourage a candidate to demure, to obfuscate, to do what Hillary Clinton does (only better).

Still, the appeal of this congressman's strategy should be obvious. Voters are primed to expect politicians to try to be all things to all people, so a pol who goes against that grain comes across like a real person. He actually is who he appears to be. "Well, he's got his reasons."

Hillary Clinton will not be that candidate in 2016. In all likelihood, she will come across as more calculating than the average politician, even though in reality they all tend to be about the same. That's the opening for the Republican party: Nominate somebody authentic, somebody who is prepared to defy his handlers on important issues, to lay out plainly the areas where there might be disagreements with voters and to give people the impression that what you see is what you get.

If it finds a candidate who combines authenticity with a real commitment to reform, the GOP can put up a robust fight to the Clinton Machine.

Washington Post blog: Post Politics: "Missouri Gov. Jay Nixon stumbled in Ferguson. He's trying to regain his footing."

By Sean Sullivan

August 15, 2014, 6:00 a.m. EDT

A week ago, Jay Nixon was a Democratic governor with a promising political future. Today, he's a guy with a rocky recent past.

The second-term governor of Missouri has been thrust into the harshest brand of national spotlight, thanks to the recent turmoil in his home state -- and widespread grousing that he's done little to resolve the standoff between police and protesters in Ferguson.

How Nixon handles the next few days could determine whether his prospects of being a vice presidential contender -- or even a presidential hopeful -- will recover, or evaporate.

Nixon spent Thursday in Ferguson. But, say political observers, that's not nearly enough.

"Do more than just visit," encouraged Michael Steele, a former lieutenant governor of Maryland and ex-chairman of the Republican National Committee. "You cannot just go there and take a walkabout amid the destruction and the tension and then go back to the state capital and say, 'Well, I've done that.'"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Nixon appeared to share that assessment, laying out a range of new moves Thursday. He announced in the afternoon that he had directed the state highway patrol to take over security efforts in Ferguson, substituting for the embattled police force there. He vowed all would see a “different tone” from law enforcement, which has clashed with protesters since Sunday.

But in the eyes of many, it was too late.

Nixon didn’t intend to come to Ferguson until late Wednesday evening. He’d been scheduled to appear at the state fair until he scrapped those plans at the last minute as criticism mounted and the skirmishes intensified. Confrontations between police and protesters have been ramping up since Sunday, leading many to question why the governor hadn't stepped in more firmly, and far sooner.

Here’s a sampling of the heavy backlash Nixon faced on Twitter Wednesday:

[TWEETS]

"Someone must step forward and take responsibility — both for the law enforcement effort that’s currently underway and then for the investigation that must follow," the St. Louis Post-Dispatch editorial board wrote on Tuesday. "It will have to be Missouri Gov. Jay Nixon, a man whose every instinct is to dodge bad news whenever possible. Sorry, governor. But you asked for the job."

Nixon won re-election by 12 percentage points in 2012, an impressive feat in a conservative state. He's not a polarizing figure. And he got high marks for his response to the tornado that devastated Joplin in 2011.

That resume has made him a not-to-be-ignored political figure ahead of the 2016 presidential election. He signaled his desire to become a bigger player in national politics in an interview with The Washington Post last year. And he's talked about the importance of having the heartland's voice heard in Washington.

As a Democrat who can connect with conservatives, Nixon would make an intriguing vice presidential candidate. If Hillary Rodham Clinton decides not to run for president, his name would have been expected to suddenly pop up on many presidential short lists.

But backlash over events in Ferguson threatens to undercut all that. These are the sorts of situations people tend to remember.

Nixon is trying to combat the perception that he was slow to address a critical situation. The governor said Thursday he felt it was important for local agencies to solve the problems in Ferguson as much as possible. When he saw that wasn't working, he said, he stepped in.

"I just felt at this particular point, the attitudes weren't improving," he explained.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Nixon discussed the situation in Ferguson with civic and faith leaders in St. Louis County on Tuesday, his team notes. On Monday, he asked the Department of Justice to probe Brown's death.

But the images Wednesday broadcast widely on cable news and social media -- of a city in turmoil, of police using tear gas, of journalists being arrested -- were overwhelming to many. And Nixon's absence from Ferguson made those images even harder for people to accept.

So now he's there, hoping to ease the tensions. It may be the right move. The question is whether he made it in time.

Calendar:

Sec. Clinton's upcoming appearances as reported online. Not an official schedule.

· August 16 – East Hampton, New York: Sec. Clinton signs books at Bookhampton East Hampton (HillaryClintonMemoir.com)

· August 28 – San Francisco, CA: Sec. Clinton keynotes Nexenta's OpenSDx Summit (BusinessWire)

· September 4 – Las Vegas, NV: Sec. Clinton speaks at the National Clean Energy Summit (Solar Novis Today)

· October 2 – Miami Beach, FL: Sec. Clinton keynotes the CREW Network Convention & Marketplace (CREW Network)

· October 13 – Las Vegas, NV: Sec. Clinton keynotes the UNLV Foundation Annual Dinner (UNLV)

· ~ October 13-16 – San Francisco, CA: Sec. Clinton keynotes salesforce.com Dreamforce conference (salesforce.com)

· December 4 – Boston, MA: Sec. Clinton speaks at the Massachusetts Conference for Women (MCFW)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Claudia Konyen" <Claudia.Konyen@gaisberg.eu>
To:	Undisclosedrecipients:
Date:	11/5/2014 3:47:42 AM
Subject:	Webinar: CESEE core resilient to EU stagnation and the Ukraine crisis: New forecast I Nov. 13, 2014

On behalf of the initiative 21st Austria we are pleased to invite you to a free webinar.
For further information please find the invitation below.
We are looking forward to having you join us.

Kind regards,
Claudia Konyen

21st Austria

Claudia Konyen
Lugeck 4 (Entrance Bäckerstraße 1)
A-1010 Vienna
T +43 (0)1 522 78 04-47, M 0664 88 44 64 26
mail to: claudia.konyen@gaisberg.eu

21st Austria wiiw

21st Austria The Vienna Institute for International Economic Studies

CESEE core resilient to EU stagnation and the Ukraine crisis: New forecast for Central, East and Southeastern European counties
Join us for a webinar on Nov 13, 2014 at 4:00 PM CET.
Register now!
https://attendee.gotowebinar.com/register/4039117899571785729

The outlook for GDP growth in the CESEE region is fairly diversified. wiiw researchers expect a gradual acceleration of GDP growth for most EU New Member States (NMS) in the short and medium term. In the Western Balkans growth prospects will only improve over the period 2015-2016. Growth performance in Kazakhstan, Russia and Ukraine will worsen in the current year compared to 2013; the medium-term outlook in Russia and Ukraine is fairly uncertain with considerable downward risks.

The following issues will be addressed at the webinar:
• Which countries of the CESEE region have managed to reach their pre-crisis level of economic performance?
• What is the role of transfers from the EU budget in the NMS countries' economic growth?
• Is there a danger of 'creditless recovery' in the CESEE region?
• How have the drivers of GDP growth changed?

21st Austria together with the Vienna Institute for International Economic Studies (WIIW) will be hosting the Webinar: CESEE core resilient to EU stagnation and the Ukraine crisis – the new forecast for Central, East and Southeastern European Countries. In this Webinar, Sándor Richter, Senior Economist of WIIW, will answer the above questions and explore the current challenges as well as growth opportunities in 21 CESEE countries.

Sándor Richter is Senior Economist at wiiw, working on regional integration of CEEC countries as well as EU integration. He is also country expert for Hungary.
After registering, you will receive a confirmation email containing information about joining the webinar.
View System Requirements

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Eryn Sepp" <esepp@equitablegrowth.org>
To:	John.podesta@gmail.com
Date:	3/4/2015 12:09:55 PM
Subject:	FW: Pakistan-Afghanistan Update: Indian Foreign Secretary Concludes Visit; SIGAR Releases ANSF Attrition Figures

Hi John—going through your old AmProg, as I do every couple of days, to make sure no one is writing anything urgent or timely to it.

Colin Cookman's updates have been going here for a long time now. Would you like me to update it to your gmail address, if you still want to get these?

Thanks,
Eryn

From: Colin Cookman [mailto:ccookman=gmail.com@mail18.wdc01.mcdlv.net] On Behalf Of Colin Cookman
Sent: Wednesday, March 04, 2015 7:23 AM
To: John Podesta
Subject: Pakistan-Afghanistan Update: Indian Foreign Secretary Concludes Visit; SIGAR Releases ANSF Attrition Figures

Topline

- India's foreign secretary met with Prime Minister Sharif on Tuesday; no joint communiqué has been issued from his visit, which Indian officials portrayed as part of broader outreach to SAARC countries, although Pakistan's foreign ministry said that "all issues of concern" were discussed. New figures on Afghan National Security Forces personnel released by SIGAR and the Department of Defense on Tuesday indicated that the number of ANA soldiers had fallen roughly 15,000 between the falls of 2013 and 2014. The main suspect in the Karachi Baldia factory fire has "mysteriously disappeared", according to Rangers officials who met on Tuesday; investigators and victims' families are also reportedly facing threats from unspecified sources. The Afghan attorney general's office announced Tuesday that it had arrested the former deputy head of the Afghan Central Bank in connection to a verdict in the Kabul Bank case last year, although he is reported to have turned himself in in December. The Supreme Court has pressed the Election Commission of Pakistan to issue a local elections schedule today; ECP officials say that the vote in Khyber Paktunkhwa will take place June 8. Pres. Ghani has ordered a review of all Afghan military logistics contracts, Reuters reports, ahead of his visit to the U.S. later this month.

Pakistan — Security

- Banned Organizations: Speaking at a press roundtable on Tuesday, Pakistan's ambassador to the U.S., Jalil Abbas Jilani, said that a formal announcement of a ban on the Haqqani network was "the kind of issues that are in the works". Separately on Wednesday, Punjab police officials told a senate committee that they had sealed a seminary in the Rajhan tehsil of Rajanpur district that was linked with Islamabad's Lal Masjid and with the spread of hate material.

Pakistan — Politics and Diplomacy

- Indian Foreign Secretary Visit: Visiting Indian foreign secretary S. Jaishankar met with Prime Minister Sharif on Tuesday, discussing regional and bilateral relations; in a statement, Sharif said that India and Pakistan "must think together, act together and move forward with the spirit of bringing the two nations closer to each other." Indian diplomatic sources described the visit as part of a regional tour of SAARC countries and not a resumption of bilateral composite dialogue talks, although some Pakistani analysts interpreted it as having been undertaken at the insistence of the United States following Pres. Obama's visit to India last month. No joint communiqué was issued following Jaishankar's meetings with his Pakistani counterpart Aizaz Chaudhry, although Chaudhry said that "all issues of concern" were discussed, including alleged Indian support for separatist groups in FATA and Balochistan. Lawyers for accused Lashkar-e-Taiba operative Zakiur Rehman Lakvhi told the Express Tribune that Jaishankar's visit was intended to "put further pressure on Pakistan"; responded to earlier questions about whether Lakhvi's case was discussed Chaudhry suggested that "there wasn't enough time to go into detail on every issue." [Pakistani Foreign Ministry Statement] [Indian Foreign Ministry Statement] [ET] [Dawn]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

- Senate Elections: The Lahore High Court gave the federal government until March 17 to respond to a petition seeking a constitutional amendment to hold senate elections under open ballot; the Senate vote is scheduled for March 5. Meanwhile, former Pres. Zardari met with party members in the Punjab assembly on Tuesday to discuss strategy for the upcoming election; the party hopes to win support for its sole candidate from Punjab from disaffected PML-N assembly members, in part through the help of former Punjab governor Chaudhry Muhammad Sarwar, who joined the PTI after quitting the PML-N last month. In Khyber Paktunkhwa, the Awami Jamhoor Ittehad Pakistan party has yet to merge with the PTI ahead of the election, despite the party's grant of a senate candidacy ticket to Liaqat Khan Taraki, the father of the party's leader. [ET] [ET] [Dawn]
- Baldia Fire Investigation: A meeting of senior officials of the paramilitary Sindh Rangers in Karachi on Tuesday "expressed concern over attempts by some elements to interfere in the Baldia Town factory fire case investigation", Dawn reports. Rizwan Quraishi, an MQM activist who linked the fire to extortion attempts and who has been disowned by the party, is now reported to have disappeared as a second investigation commission has begun a review the causes of the fire; the investigating officers and family members of the victims have reportedly been subjected to threats.
- Local Elections: Election Commission officials told the Supreme Court on Wednesday that they would announce a schedule for local elections by April 6 and that polls will be held June 8 in Khyber Paktunkhwa, January 10, 2016 in Punjab, and February 22, 2016, in Sindh — the court ordered the formal announcement to be made by 8:00 PM today. The attorney general sought to deflect a contempt of court petition against the federal government for failing to hold the elections in military cantonment areas, where it has direct responsibility, by laying blame on the senate for not taking up the issue. [Dawn]
- Election Complaints: The Supreme Court issued its detailed verdict from December of its judgment clearing Prime Minister Sharif from PTI challenges seeking his disqualification on the grounds that he had lied before parliament and thus violated Articles 62 and 63 of the Constitution, which requires candidates be "righteous, sagacious, and ameen", a qualification the court noted was vague and ill-defined. Separately, the election tribunal hearing complaints into the NA-122 Lahore constituency accepted a PTI petition seeking thumbprint verification on all ballot counterfoils.
- Regulator Service: The government is reportedly considering the creation of a new civil service branch for the main government regulatory bodies — including the Oil and Gas Regulatory Authority, National Electric Power Regulatory Authority, Pakistan Telecommunications Authority, and Pakistan Electronic Media Regulatory Authority. Current appointments to these bodies are made by independent panels; Dawn suggests the measure is under consideration part due to clashes between the government and the nominally independent regulators.

Pakistan — Economics and Development

- Vaccination Efforts: Two health officials have been suspended in connection to reports yesterday that $3.7 million worth of child vaccines had degraded under improper storage conditions, the national manager of the Expanded Program on Immunization told the AFP on Tuesday. Separately, Gates Foundation chairman Bill Gates spoke by phone with PTI leader Imran Khan on Tuesday, welcoming the efforts of Khyber Paktunkhwa's ongoing 'Sehat Ka Ittehad' anti-polio vaccination campaign. [ET]

Pakistan — Remainders

- Sharif Departs for Saudi Arabia [Dawn] [ET]
- MQM Lawyer, Former PPP Union Councilor Killed in Karachi Shootings [ET] [ET]
- TTP Commander Detained in Hangu [Dawn]
- Death Row Sentence Halted After Family Pardon [ET]
- Opposition Senators Continue Protest Over Economic Corridor Route [Dawn]
- Prime Minister Reviews Nuclear Power Projects [Dawn]
- Senate Committee Approves Amendments to Securities and Exchange Commission Powers [ET]
- Senate Committee Proposes Bar on Dual National Civil Servants [ET]
- Senate Seeks Detail on Perks for Retired Chief Justices [ET] [Dawn]
- Commentary: Pakistan's Terrorism Accusations Against India: Bizarre But Calculated – "Pakistan's leaders, whether civilian or military, have a history of leveling accusations on India's alleged involvement in everything from sectarian violence in Pakistan to terrorism perpetrated via proxies from Afghanistan." [Rohan Joshi, The Diplomat]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Afghanistan — Security

- ANSF Attrition: Figures released by the Special Inspector for Afghan Reconstruction on Tuesday — following their declassification after top U.S. commander Gen. John Campbell reversed a previous classification order in January — indicated that the number of Afghan National Army soldiers had declined from roughly 184,000 to roughly 169,000 between the falls of 2013 and 2014. SIGAR questioned figures offered for Afghan police, suggesting that the actual number might be roughly 151,000 instead of roughly 156,000 as reported. [SIGAR Report (pdf)]
- Zabul Operations: The provincial police chief of Zabul province, Ghulam Sakhi Rogh Lewanai, told RFE/RL on Wednesday that at least 32 militants had been killed in operations in the Khak-e-Afghan district that began the day prior; he said that all were associated with Daesh, or the Islamic State in Iraq and Syria. Local accounts of the identity of gunmen responsible for the kidnapping of 30 Hazara men from the district last week have conflicted over their affiliations; an anonymous caller to RFE/RL reporters claimed affiliation with Daesh but said that only seven fighters had been killed.

Afghanistan — Politics and Diplomacy

- Kabul Bank Arrests: On Tuesday, the Afghan attorney general's office announced that it had imprisoned Mohibullah Safi, the former deputy head of the Afghan Central Bank, in connection to the 2010 Kabul Bank crisis. Safi received a one-year sentence in connection to the case last fall, but fled the country. Although not announced at the time, he is reported to have turned himself in back in December, and anonymous sources in the attorney general's office say that $52 million in assets had been seized from him; a spokesman for the attorney general's office was unable to confirm the latter figure.
- Taliban Talks: TOLO news notes remarks by Pakistani Ulema Council chairman Hafiz Muhammad Tahir Ashrafi, who expressed support for a resolution of the conflict in Afghanistan through peace talks.

Afghanistan — Economics and Development

- Military Contract Review: Following the suspension of an Afghan National Army fuel supply contract earlier this year, Pres. Ghani has reportedly ordered a review of all military logistics contracts , Reuters reports. An economist leading the review, Hamidullah Farooqi, says that "we expect to have the first stage done in the next week or two", coinciding with Ghani's visit to the United States later this month.
- TAPI Pipeline: The Express Tribune reports that a Pakistani cabinet committee on energy meeting on February 12 raised concerns over the "complex structure" of the TAPI gas pipeline project, and the pricing of gas, at $6.9 per million British thermal units, or $1 cheaper than LNG import agreements. A meeting of TAPI members in February in Islamabad failed to reach an agreement on a consortium leader for the financing and construction of the pipeline, which Turkmenistan reportedly aims to do by October.

Afghanistan — Remainders

- Report: 'Today We Shall All Die' – "The impunity enjoyed by powerful figures raises serious concerns about Afghan government and international efforts to arm, train, vet, and hold accountable Afghan National Police units, National Directorate of Security officials, and Afghan Local Police forces." [Human Rights Watch]
- Commentary: A Step Forward for Afghan Women? – "For months, Mahbouba Seraj traveled across Afghanistan to drum up support for an ambitious new policy framework to ensure women's equal rights and participation in governmental decision-making, protection from violence, and human development." [Elizabeth Weingarten and Leilal Hilal, Foreign Policy]

You are receiving this email because you subscribed to receive daily news summaries on Pakistan and Afghanistan. Suggestions of articles or sources for additional news are always appreciated. Opinion or editorial items included in this message do not necessarily represent the views of the editor. Caveat lector.

Email not displaying correctly? View it in your browser .

Unsubscribe jpodesta@americanprogress.org :: Subscribe new contact

Update subscription profile

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

2015 :: Colin Cookman

(cc) BY-NC-SA

Our mailing address is:
Colin Cookman
112 Q Street NW
Washington, DC 20001

Add us to your address book

MailChimp

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Eizenstat, Stuart" <seizenstat@cov.com>
To:	Jake.Sullivan@gmail.com
Date:	6/22/2015 8:07:37 AM
Subject:	Re: Iran Nuclear Deal

Jake,
You are right. We should be more generic, like giving all our allies in the region all the means they need to defend themselves against any Iranian provocation, threat or attack.

If you want to talk now about BDS I am up. You could call at either 202-549-4454 or 202-549-5776.
Thanks and best wishes,

Stu

----- Original Message -----
From: Jake Sullivan [mailto:jake.sullivan@gmail.com]
Sent: Monday, June 22, 2015 02:05 PM
To: Eizenstat, Stuart
Cc: John.Podesta@gmail.com <John.Podesta@gmail.com>; huma@hrcoffice.com <huma@hrcoffice.com>; tom.nides@morganstanley.com <tom.nides@morganstanley.com>
Subject: Re: Iran Nuclear Deal

Stu - I would characterize the terms of the deal a bit differently from how you have, but my bottom line is the same as yours. My only question about your six points at the bottom is whether we should go there on bunker busters.

> On Jun 22, 2015, at 2:23 AM, Eizenstat, Stuart <seizenstat@cov.com> wrote:
>
> Dear Jake,
>
> I have sent several detailed notes on the Iran nuclear deal, and will avoid repetition. But with the June 30 deadline fast approaching (although it may be extended), and with Hillary certain to be pressed on whether she supports the deal and will urge Congress not to disapprove it, I wanted to share a few thoughts.
>
> 1. This could well be a voting issue for many moderates in the Jewish community. The mainstream organized leadership will almost certainly oppose the deal, along with Israel and all the Republican candidates, Saudi Arabia and the Gulf States, and perhaps Egypt.
>
> 2. While we cannot be sure until there is a final agreement, it appears that many of the open issues since the preliminary accord, may be resolved in Iran's favor:
>
> (1) Enriched uranium will stay in Iran for dilution, rather than be sent to Russia or France for reprocessing.
>
> (2) Sanctions will not be phased-out commensurate with compliance, as the US Fact Sheet indicated after the last "agreement", but may come off more quickly. This will transfer billions to Iran and enhance its funding for terrorism and its efforts to gain hegemony in the region.
>
> (3) It is not clear what Iran will be required to do on PMD, if anything. This was required of Iraq by the UNSC in September 2002. Iran should be held to the same standard. They have yet to answer 11 of the 12 IAEA questions, yet UN sanctions will be lifted.
>
> (4) Russia, China and Iran itself may be able to block "snapback" sanctions if there is a violation of the agreement. US companies will be disadvantaged compared to European companies, since many US non-nuclear sanctions will remain, while all EU sanctions are nuclear-related.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

>
> (5) Military sites (Parchin) are likely to be off the table for inspections.
>
> (6) Iran will likely be able to do research on advanced centrifuges, which enrich more uranium more rapidly than the current generation. This would markedly reduce the breakout time in the last years of the accord. Presidenr Obama has conceded this point (e.g. David Sanger article in NYT, April 8, 2015)
>
> (7) Iran will have an industrial size nuclear program, and will be left as a "nuclear capable state".
>
> (8) Iran will be able to keep 1000 centrifuges at Fordo.
>
> (9) Nothing in the agreement will limit its support for terrorism.
>
> 3. That said, there are likely to be positive aspects to the agreement.
>
> (1) The Arak plutonium plant will be effectively dismantled.
>
> (2) There will be more intrusive IAEA inspections, since Iran will sign the Additional Protocol of thr NPT.
>
> (3) The number of centrifuges will be cut by 2/3.
>
> (4) Iran will be a year away from breakout. It would still need to develop a nuclear weapon that can fit on a missile.
>
> (5) Iran's stockpile of enriched uranium from 10 tons to 700 pounds.
>
> (6) Ten years is a long time and Iran's conduct may moderate.
>
> 4, Hillary cannot oppose the agreement given her position as the President's Secretary of State and should urge its approval by Congress under Corker-Cardin. But she can and should point out concerns with it (as she did, unfortunately from my perspective, on TPP/TPA). More broadly, she should appear more muscular I her approach than the President's. The statement I suggested a few months ago still would be appropriate. But she should also say the following:
>
> (1) As President, she would never consider Iran a strategic partner in the region. Quite the contrary, she would do all she can to oppose Iranian misconduct.
>
> (2) Our allies in the region must know that we will stand behind them and supply them with the means to defend themselves and avoid the region tilting to Iran, including bunker-busting bombs Bush and Obama refused to provide to Israel.. Defense treaties should be considered so any attack by Iran would be considered an attack against the US.
>
> (3) Bibi should be invited for early talks on how the partnership with Israel can be strengthened to combat Iran and Israel's other avowed enemies.
>
> (4) A common agenda should be forged with Israel and our Arab allies.
>
> (5) If the US itself believes Iran has cheated, as President, she would reimpose US sanctions, even if Russia-China-Iran say there was no violation. She would work to get the EU to also reimpose their sanctions.
>
> (6) It is just as unacceptable for Iran to develop a nuclear weapon after the expiration of the agreement, as it is during the agreement, given the nature of the regime. Therefore, while she would not be president, all means should be used to prevent Iran from acquiring a nuclear weapon.
>
> Best wishes,
>
> Stu Eizenstat

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Ilan Goldenberg" <igoldenberg@nsnetwork.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 8/5/2008 3:20:15 AM
Subject: [big campaign] A New Direction for Iran Policy

NSN Daily Update: A New Direction for Iran Policy
8/5/08

As part of its negotiating pattern of vague non-responses, it appears that Iran will not agree to temporarily freeze its uranium enrichment program in a response today to an offer by the United States and its allies. This failure again shows the need for the United States to develop a comprehensive security strategy for dealing with Iran that includes tough and direct diplomacy between the two countries. But instead, John McCain wants to continue the bellicose rhetoric and war threats of the Bush administration, while pursuing the same policy that has already proved to be a failure.

Iran will give a formal response today to an incentives package in exchange for a freeze in nuclear activity. However, according to U.S. and European officials, there is little expectation of a positive reply. The chief Iranian negotiator will provide a written explanation of Iran's position on the two-week-old offer to freeze further economic sanctions and begin substantive talks. According to Reuters, the Iranian media has reported that Iran's letter was handed over early Tuesday, although an official representing the six powers said no written response had yet been received. Reuters further reports that an Iranian official has said: "The letter handed over is not an answer to the offered package ... The letter does not mention the freeze-for-freeze issue." The U.N. Security Council has passed three resolutions sanctioning Iran for refusing to suspend its uranium enrichment program since March 2006. Thus far, Iran has refused to comply. Discussions on further sanctions are set to begin unless the Iranian reply is positive and unambiguous [Washington Post, 9/5/08 ; Reuters, 9/5/08]

After years of bellicose rhetoric and no coherent diplomatic strategy, the Bush administration's belated efforts are too little too late. The U.S. must develop a coherent and comprehensive security strategy to deal with Iran that includes direct engagement and addresses key issues including: Iran's uranium enrichment program, the situation in Iraq, and Iran's support for Hezbollah and Hamas. For the past eight years we have pursued an incoherent approach that fails to focus clearly on American interests and does not effectively use all of the tools of power available to us. We need a wholesale reevaluation of our policy, with a clear prioritization of the most important issues, and a plan for what the U.S. could hope to achieve by talking directly with Iran, both in the short and long-term. This strategy must take into account what we can hope to achieve through economic threats and incentives and what role military pressure may play. It must also include collaboration with our European allies, Russia, China, Saudi Arabia and other Gulf States to achieve our interests. Finally, we must combine engagement with containment and deterrence as we did when we had a comprehensive strategy towards the Soviet Union during the Cold War.

John McCain would pursue the same failed strategies of George Bush that empowered Iran instead of stopping its uranium enrichment program. John McCain supports not talking to Iran and instead continuing the same strategies that have not worked for the last eight years. He has supported George Bush's assessment of characterizing direct talks with Iran as appeasement. These policies have resulted in Iran moving further along on its uranium enrichment program and could eventually lead the U.S. to face a terrible choice of either a nuclear Iran or war. [John McCain, 6/2/08]

Quick Hits

1250 Marines were ordered to extend their tour in Afghanistan by one month, completing a mission of 'top priority.' Impromptu troop extensions have become indicative of the Department of Defense's misallocation of resources in the war.

A Pakistani scientist educated in elite US universities was detained in Afghanistan after assaulting two soldiers and F.B.I. officers. Aafia Siddiqui , a neuroscientist, allegedly has ties to top al Qaeda operatives held in Guantanamo.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The panel of jurors began its second day of deliberations in the case of Salim Hamdan at Guantanamo Bay. A verdict by the 6-person panel is expected soon.

A senior Sunni tribal leader allied with the US was ambushed and killed by gunmen in southern Baghdad. Al Qaeda in Iraq has been targeting Sunni tribal leaders since the start of the "Awakening."

President Bush today kicked off his tour of Asia, which will culminate in the opening ceremonies of the Beijing Olympics, in South Korea.

An earthquake of the magnitude 6.0 hit the Chinese province of Sichuan just hours after the Olympic torch made its final stop in the capital of the region.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "t r u t h o u t" <messenger@truthout.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 12/1/2014 9:28:05 AM
Subject: Dahr Jamail | Are Humans Going Extinct?

View Recent Newsletters

Tell a friend about Truthout!

Monday, 1 December 2014

truthout

Donate Today!

Truthout is a 501(c)3 nonprofit organization; donations are tax deductible.

Dahr Jamail | Are Humans Going Extinct?

Dahr Jamail, Truthout: Some scientists, Guy McPherson included, fear that climate disruption is so serious, with so many self-reinforcing feedback loops already in play, that humans are in the process of causing our own extinction.

Read the Interview

Lawsuit Challenges Radioactive Fracking Waste Facilities in Ohio

Mike Ludwig, Truthout: Environmentalists say state regulators allow fracking waste facilities to operate with little regulatory oversight. Ohio, they say, has become fracking's "dumping ground," as the industry crosses state lines to take advantage of lax regulations.

Read the Article

US Support for Mexico's Drug War Goes Beyond Guns and Money

Mike LaSusa and Angelika Albaladejo, Truthout: While the United States goes well beyond simply providing diplomatic, financial and technical support for Mexico's fight against organized crime and puts its own personnel on the front lines, corruption and violence characterize both US and Mexican security forces.

Read the Article

The GOP Is Coming for Obamacare by Any Means Necessary

Robin Marty, Care2: The GOP is coming for Obamacare, just as everyone expected. But they aren't waiting until their new compatriots are sworn into office. Now that the midterms are settled and no one is in danger of losing a seat, House Republicans are filing a lawsuit against Obamacare.

Read the Article

Dean Baker | The Paid Vacation Route to Full Employment

Dean Baker, Truthout: If we can't take steps to increase the demand for labor, we can go the other

BuzzFlash

First Nations Win Skirmish Against Tar Sands Pipeline in British Columbia

Mark Karlin, BuzzFlash at Truthout: It is a testament to the commitment, defiance and integrity of the indigenous peoples of Canada and the United States that they are contesting the toxic tainting of their ancestral homelands.

Read the BuzzFlash Commentary

Christian Right's Rage Problem: How White Fundamentalists Are Roiling America

Read the Article at Salon

Momentous Pressure on World Leaders as Climate Talks

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

way and try to reduce the supply. Specifically, we can try to increase the number of people employed by reducing the average number of hours worked.

Read the Article

Who Will Police the Police?

The Daily Take Team, The Thom Hartmann Program: As the nation continues to react to the events in Ferguson, Missouri, many people are asking themselves, "Where do we go from here?" It's time to bring community policing back to the United States, and add an impartial system for accountability when a cop goes rogue.

Read the Article

Victory for Climate Justice Activists

Matt Smith and Margaret Flowers, Popular Resistance: In a successful court appearance recently, government prosecutors were unable to proceed with charges against six activists involved in a weeklong blockade in early November of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission Headquarters in Washington, DC.

Read the Article

Why Is the IAEA Getting Iran Wrong?

Yousaf Butt, National Interest: With the deadline for a nuclear deal with Iran looming, US and EU officials met their senior Iranian counterparts in Oman earlier this week to try to hammer out a compromise. The deal may still fall through, in part because of mismanagement at the International Atomic Energy Agency.

Read the Article

Obama's Immigration Plan May Give Economy a Little Boost

Sherrie Kossoudji, The Conversation: Besides improving the immigrants' well-being, what is the economic effect of the president's immigration plan? One direct impact is a likely boost in pay of undocumented residents who qualify when wages rise because workers have access to promotions they may otherwise not have received.

Read the Article

Amy Goodman | Novelist Isabel Allende on Her Literary Career and Memories of Chile During the CIA-Backed Coup

Amy Goodman, Democracy Now!: Isabel Allende is one of Latin America's and the United States' greatest novelists. Just this week she was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom. She speaks about her literary career and her memories of Chile before and during a US-backed coup.

Watch the Video and Read the Transcript

On the News With Thom Hartmann: The Wealth Gap in the US Is Putting People Out of Work, and More

In today's On the News segment: The wealth gap in our country isn't just increasing inequality, it's also putting people out of work; Seattle's socialist city council member wants homeless people to have access to the internet; Walmart is asking employees to donate food to coworkers who can't survive on poverty wages; and more.

Watch the Video and Read the Transcript

Begin in Lima
Read the Article at EcoWatch

The Science of Why Cops Shoot Young Black Men
Read the Article at Mother Jones

This Is Black Friday in Bangladesh
Read the Article at The Nation

St. Louis Rams Players Enter Field With "Hands Up, Don't Shoot" Pose to Honor Michael Brown
Read the Article at Deadspin

If Mubarak Is Innocent, Who Ordered the Killing of 900 Protestors During the Egyptian Revolution?
Read the Article at Global Voices

Cyber Ring Stole Secrets for Gaming US Stock Market
Read the Article at Reuters

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Handing More Control to Patients Could Just Be Cost-Cutting in Disguise

Lisa Kidd and Andy Cassidy, The Conversation: Where British health care is concerned, there clearly have to be changes in service delivery. That patients are living longer and with increasingly complex conditions demonstrates the abilities of our health service, but it also places an ever-increasing burden on it. As such, economic restrictions are often essential.

Read the Article

Support Truthout with a tax-deductible donation

Please add messenger@truthout.org to ensure you receive our messages

Truthout is a proud member of the New spaper Guild/CWA, Local 36047

Subscribe | Unsubscribe

Privacy Policy

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Oren Shur" <oshur@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Jim Margolis" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com> "Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com> "David Dixon" <david@dixondavismedia.com> "Rich Davis" <rich@dixondavismedia.com> "John Rimel" <John.Rimel@gmmb.com> "Jim Andrews" <jandrews@jacompany.com>
Date:	1/23/2016 11:14:25 AM
Subject:	Fwd: BREAKING: DMR: Endorsement: Hillary Clinton has needed knowledge, experience

This is great, half of it reads like one of our ads.
Jim and I just discussed and we should deff cut a script from this.
Dixon Davis, are you guys available to take first crack?
My only question - whether we lean into "the presidency is not an entry level position" - and push off from it, or just let that part go.

Sent from my iPhone

Begin forwarded message:

From: Zachary Petkanas <zpetkanas@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: January 23, 2016 at 6:00:48 PM EST
To: Clips <clips@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: BREAKING: DMR: Endorsement: Hillary Clinton has needed knowledge, experience

DMR : Endorsement: Hillary Clinton has needed knowledge, experience

If there's one thing Democrats and Republicans agree on this year, it's the fact that the next president will face enormous challenges.

Domestically, this president must work with Congress in confronting the issues of immigration, health care, increased threats to national security, the disappearing middle class, the growing deficit, Social Security solvency, gun control, renewable energy, sentencing reform and more.

On the world stage, this president will have to work with foreign leaders in dealing with ISIS and other terrorists, climate change, the containment of nuclear threats posed in North Korea and Iran, the Russian incursions in Ukraine and foreign trade.

The presidency is not an entry-level position. Whoever is sworn into office next January must demonstrate not only a deep understanding of the issues facing America, but also possess the diplomatic skills that enable presidents to forge alliances to get things done.

By that measure, Democrats have one outstanding candidate deserving of their support: Hillary Clinton. No other candidate can match the depth or breadth of her knowledge and experience.

As first lady, she worked tirelessly on health care reform and, with bipartisan support, created the Children's Health Insurance Program that provides coverage for 8 million children.

As a senator, she reached across party lines and joined forces with conservatives, including Sen. Lindsey Graham and former House Speaker Newt Gingrich, to fight for job creation and universal health care.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

ENDORSEMENT: Marco Rubio can chart new direction for GOP

NASH: Register faced tough decision in endorsements

RELATED:A history of Register caucus endorsements

As secretary of state, she helped secure international sanctions against Iran and redefined her job by expanding America's diplomatic agenda to include poverty, women's rights, the environment and other issues.

She is not a perfect candidate, as evidenced the way she has handled the furor over her private email server. In our endorsement of her 2008 campaign for president, we wrote that "when she makes a mistake, she should just say so." That appears to be a lesson she has yet to fully embrace.

Her changing stance on gay marriage, immigration and other issues has invited accusations that she is guided less by personal conviction than by political calculations. She refutes that, and argues persuasively that a willingness to change one's thinking on specific issues, while remaining true to what she calls "the same values and principles," is a virtue, one lacking in most politicians.

Over the course of two meetings, Clinton spent more than three hours with the editorial board, answering questions in a direct and forthright manner. She exhibited an impressive command of the issues, though we'd have liked to hear more from her on the debt and the future of Social Security. She was somewhat prickly and defensive when discussing her emails, but overall she was gracious, engaging and personable.

Her chief opponent for the nomination, Sen. Bernie Sanders of Vermont, has proven to be an honorable and formidable campaigner, and it's very likely that without him in the race, candidates in both parties wouldn't be discussing America's growing inequality in wealth and income.

Sanders has tapped into the public's anger and frustration with Washington, without demonizing government and resorting to the cheap demagoguery favored by Donald Trump and others. He has shown himself to be a man of courage and principle who has the ability to rally others to his cause.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Buy Photo

Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton meets with the Des Moines Register editorial board Monday Jan 11, 2015, in Des Moines, Iowa. Rodney White/The Register

Buy Photo

Fullscreen

-
-
-
-
-
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

-
-
-
-
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-
-

Next Slide

But Sanders admits that virtually all of his plans for reform have no chance of being approved by a Congress that bears any resemblance to the current crop of federal lawmakers. This is why, he says, voters can't simply elect him president, but must instead spark a "political revolution."

Easier said than done. Congress has the largest Republican majority since the 71st Congress of 1929-31.

A successful Sanders presidency would hinge on his ability to remake Washington in his own image. It's almost inconceivable that such a transformation could take place, even with Democrats controlling both chambers of Congress.

As for Martin O'Malley, the data-driven, wonkish former Maryland governor who has gained little traction in the campaign so far, he seems better suited to a Cabinet-level job in a Clinton White House.

In the final analysis, Iowa Democrats will have to choose between the lofty idealism of Bernie Sanders and the down-to-earth pragmatism of Hillary Clinton. For some, this will be a choice of whether to vote with their hearts or their heads.

Clinton has demonstrated that she is a thoughtful, hardworking public servant who has earned the respect of leaders at home and abroad. She stands ready to take on the most demanding job in the world.

This endorsement is the opinion of The Des Moines Register's editorial board:

David Chivers, president and publisher

Amalie Nash*, executive editor and vice president for news and engagement*

Lynn Hicks, opinion editor

Clark Kauffman, editorial writer

Andie Dominick, editorial writer

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Brian Smith, engagement editor

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com>
To:	jbenenson@bsgco.com john.podesta@gmail.com dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com
Date:	10/24/2015 7:21:31 AM
Subject:	comments on latest JJ draft
Attachments:	2015-10-24 JJ - 1MGpm.docx

I'm not crazy about this new draft. I like the addition of the accomplishments at the end (proof that she gets things done) but:

-I don't think WJC's opening about Wing Ding, debate etc works. It feels very much about process -- the opposite of what he and HRC said about making this about people.

-I think structurally, it felt stronger to go to the GOP attack first -- those who want to rip away our progress -- before what we want to do.

-- I think it's fine to add some of the policy to the fights section -- I though HRC and WJC were right that that section need to be clearer about what HRC is trying to do, not just who she is fighting for, but now I'm worried we may not get the applause we want.

-- Most of all, I'm concerned that it is not clear what our argument is. Not clear what we are saying and what our sound bite will be. I thought we wanted to say:

1. We won't let GOP rip away our progress
2. We are fighting to make a difference in people's lives (not just complain but do something, not just shout, but deliver)

I am worried that in the absence of a clear soundbite and driving point -- our soundbite will be about the hearings or Biden -- and I don't think thats really what we want.

Ive tracked some specific comments on the draft.

thanks

Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202 973-9400

-----Original Message-----
From: Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com>
To: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com>; Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
Cc: Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>; Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com>; Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>; Matt Paul <mpaul@hillaryclinton.com>; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com>; Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com>; Bonnie Rubin <brubin@hillaryclinton.com>; ha16 <ha16@hillaryclinton.com>; mfisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>; sbay <sbay@hillaryclinton.com>; kofferdahl <kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com>; mmarshall <mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com>
Sent: Sat, Oct 24, 2015 1:59 pm
Subject: RE: Call with HRC

I am not a fan of this either – was just offering a way to do it.

I actually think the less we're looking back and the quicker get focused on what's a head the stronger the whole speech will be.

From: John Podesta [mailto:john.podesta@gmail.com]
Sent: Saturday, October 24, 2015 1:58 PM
To: Dan Schwerin
Cc: Jim Margolis; Joel Benenson; Robby Mook; Jennifer Palmieri; Matt Paul; Jake Sullivan; Mandy Grunwald; Bonnie Rubin; ha16@hillaryclinton.com ; mfisher@hillaryclinton.com ; sbay@hillaryclinton.com ; kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com ; mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com
Subject: Re: Call with HRC

I defer if others think this buys us good will with Sanders people, but email jokes in Iowa usually end up badly and don't we want to move on?

On Saturday, October 24, 2015, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
I think Podesta has some concerns about referencing emails, even like this

On Sat, Oct 24, 2015 at 12:17 PM, Margolis, Jim <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com > wrote:
That works too Joel.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I think her using it shows strength
Not worried about credit for Bernie

Jim Margolis
Sent from my iPhone.
Please excuse typos.

On Oct 24, 2015, at 10:59 AM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com > wrote:

It's a joke that would work and room would love it. However one caveat:

I think it gives Bernie the credit for putting the email crap behind us instead of her --- she crushed the debate and she crushed at the committee.. And while crowd may love it question for comms team is whether reporters would take it as proof that Bernie "saved" her campaign from the email tempest.

Maybe I'm being too literal here but that was my thought process.

If others think I'm overthinking this, we can use it.

Line could be ---- I don't if you all saw it but the hearing went on for 11 hours. Eleven hours. I was kind of expecting around hour # 8 Bernie Sanders would burst in and shout --- "enough about your damn emails Hillary!!"

From: Margolis, Jim [mailto:Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com]
Sent: Saturday, October 24, 2015 11:52 AM
To: Robby Mook
Cc: Jennifer Palmieri; Joel Benenson; Matt Paul; Jake Sullivan; John Podesta; Mandy Grunwald; Bonnie Rubin; dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com; ha16@hillaryclinton.com ; mfisher@hillaryclinton.com ; sbay@hillaryclinton.com ; kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com; mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com
Subject: Re: Call with HRC

You all think wjc's joke is too much about her kinda wishing after hour 8 that Bernie would come through the door with his damn email line ..,?
I think it's funny and confident and the room would love it.

Jim Margolis
Sent from my iPhone.
Please excuse typos.

On Oct 24, 2015, at 10:45 AM, Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

Is there some Apprentice joke to make? I never saw the show. I'm also the worst person to generate jokes....

On Oct 24, 2015, at 10:41 AM, Margolis, Jim <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com > wrote:

All that said… we really could use a little humor in here…
Thinking.

From: Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >
Date: Saturday, October 24, 2015 at 11:40 AM
To: Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >
Cc: Matt Paul <mpaul@hillaryclinton.com >, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >, Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >, Bonnie Rubin <brubin@hillaryclinton.com >, Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com >, "dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com " <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >, Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com >, GMMB GMMB <jim.margolis@gmmb.com >, Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com >, "sbay@hillaryclinton.com " <sbay@hillaryclinton.com >, "kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com " <kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com >, Marlon Marshall <mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: Re: Call with HRC

I was kidding!

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:38 AM, Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com> wrote:

Not ninnies.

We own the high ground right now. We should stay there.

From: Jennifer Palmieri [mailto:jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Saturday, October 24, 2015 11:38 AM
To: Matt Paul
Cc: Jake Sullivan; John Podesta; Mandy Grunwald; Bonnie Rubin; Robby Mook; dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com ; Joel Benenson; ha16@hillaryclinton.com ; Jim Margolis; mfisher@hillaryclinton.com ; sbay@hillaryclinton.com ; kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com; mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com
Subject: Re: Call with HRC

Wow. You people are a bunch of ninnies.

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:37 AM, Matt Paul <mpaul@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

Agree-tempting. but she shouldn't go there tonight

On Sat, Oct 24, 2015 at 10:33 AM, Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:
I love the joke too but I think HRC should stay above the committee - and especially above personal insults about it. She's got every inch of the high ground right now.

On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:30 AM, Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com> wrote:

That's because you love your own joke.

But I think it is okay.

Sent from my iPhone

On Oct 24, 2015, at 11:04 AM, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com> wrote:

I don't think so.
On Oct 24, 2015 10:54 AM, "Mandy Grunwald" <gruncom@aol.com> wrote:
LOVE the Trey Gowdy line.

Just wonder if that undercuts our statesmanship point too much.

Mandy Grunwald
Grunwald Communications
202 973-9400

-----Original Message-----
From: John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To: Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
Cc: Jim Margolis <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>; Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com>; Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com>; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com>; Sawsan Bay <sbay@hillaryclinton.com>; Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>; Bonnie Rubin <brubin@hillaryclinton.com>; Marlon Marshall <mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com>; Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com>; Milia Fisher <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>; Matt Paul <mpaul@hillaryclinton.com>; Kate Offerdahl <kofferdahl@hillaryclinton.com>; Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com>
Sent: Sat, Oct 24, 2015 10:49 am
Subject: Re: Call with HRC

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

I couldn't talk on the call, but I agree with Joel, let's not go back to emails.
Re Jen's point on this being a partisan crowd salesmanship not partisanship is a hard shot at the Republicans, so I think it's fine.
On freshening things up, what about: I used to be obsessed with Donald Trump's hair, that was until I got to spend 11 hours staring at the top of Trey Gowdy's head
On Oct 24, 2015 9:38 AM, "Dan Schwerin" <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
Here's Obama in 2007:

Barack Obama, 2007

Thank you so much. To the great Governor of Iowa and Lieutenant. Governor of Iowa. To my dear friend Tom Harkin for the outstanding work that he does. To the congressional delegation of Iowa that is doing outstanding work and to Nancy Pelosi , Madam Speaker, thank you all for the wonderful welcome and the wonderful hospitality.

[Responding to audience] I love you back.

A little less than one year from today, you will go into the voting booth and you will select the President of the United States of America. Now, here's the good news -- the name George W. Bush will not be on the ballot. The name of my cousin Dick Cheney will not be on the ballot. We've been trying to hide that for a long time. Everybody has a black sheep in the family. The era of Scooter Libby justice, and Brownie incompetence, and Karl Rove politics will finally be over.

But the question you're going to have to ask yourself when you caucus in January and you vote in November is, "What's next for America?" We are in a defining moment in our history. Our nation is at war. The planet is in peril. The dream that so many generations fought for feels as if it's slowly slipping away. We are working harder for less. We've never paid more for health care or for college. It's harder to save and it's harder to retire. And most of all we've lost faith that our leaders can or will do anything about it.

We were promised compassionate conservatism and all we got was Katrina and wiretaps. We were promised a uniter, and we got a President who could not even lead the half of the country that voted for him. We were promised a more ethical and more efficient government, and instead we have a town called Washington that is more corrupt and more wasteful than it was before. And the only mission that was ever accomplished is to use fear and falsehood to take this country to a war that should have never been authorized and should have never been waged.

It is because of these failures that America is listening, intently, to what we say here today -- not just Democrats, but Republicans and Independents who've lost trust in their government, but want to believe again.

And it is because of these failures that we not only have a moment of great challenge, but also a moment of great opportunity. We have a chance to bring the country together in a new majority -- to finally tackle problems that George Bush made far worse, but that had festered long before George Bush ever took office -- problems that we've talked about year after year after year after year.

And that is why the same old Washington textbook campaigns just won't do in this election. That's why not answering questions, because we are afraid our answers won't be popular just won't do. That's why telling the American people what we think they want to hear instead of telling the American people what they need to hear just won't do. Triangulating and poll-driven positions because we're worried about what Mitt or Rudy might say about us just won't do. If we are really serious about wining this election Democrats, we can't live in fear of losing it.
This party -- the party of Jefferson and Jackson; of Roosevelt and Kennedy -- has always made the biggest difference in the lives of the American people when we led, not by polls, but by principle; not by calculation, but by conviction; when we summoned the entire nation to a common purpose -- a higher purpose. And I run for the Presidency of the United States of America because that's the party America needs us to be right now.

A party that offers not just a difference in policies, but a difference in leadership.

A party that doesn't just focus on how to win but why we should. A party that doesn't just offer change as a slogan, but real, meaningful change -- change that America can believe in. That's why I'm in this race. That's why I am running for the Presidency of the United States of America -- to offer change that we can believe in.

I am in this race to tell the corporate lobbyists that their days of setting the agenda in Washington are over. I have done more than any other candidate in this race to take on lobbyists -- and won. They have not funded my campaign, they will not get a job in my White House, and they will not drown out the voices of the American people when I am President. I'm in this race to take those tax breaks away from companies that are moving jobs overseas and put them in the pockets of hard working Americans who deserve it. And I won't raise the minimum wage every ten years -- I will raise it to keep pace so that workers don't' fall behind.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That is why I am in it. To protect the American worker. To fight for the American worker.
I'm in this race because I want to stop talking about the outrage of 47 million Americans without health care and start actually doing something about it. I expanded health care in Illinois by bringing Democrats and Republicans together. By taking on the insurance industry. And that is how I will make certain that every single American in this country has health care they can count on and I won't do it twenty years from now, I won't do it ten years from now, I will do it by the end of my first term as President of the United States of America.

I run for president to make sure that every American child has the best education that we have to offer -- from the day they are born to the day they graduate from college. And I won't just talk about how great teachers are -- as President I will reward them for their greatness -- by raising salaries and giving them more support. That's why I'm in this race.

I am running for President because I am sick and tired of democrats thinking that the only way to look tough on national security is by talking, and acting, and voting like George Bush Republicans.

When I am this party's nominee, my opponent will not be able to say that I voted for the war in Iraq; or that I gave George Bush the benefit of the doubt on Iran; or that I supported Bush-Cheney policies of not talking to leaders that we don't like. And he will not be able to say that I wavered on something as fundamental as whether or not it is ok for America to torture -- because it is never ok. That's why I am in it.

As President, I will end the war in Iraq. We will have our troops home in sixteen months. I will close Guantanamo. I will restore habeas corpus. I will finish the fight against Al Qaeda. And I will lead the world to combat the common threats of the 21st century -- nuclear weapons and terrorism; climate change and poverty; genocide and disease. And I will send once more a message to those yearning faces beyond our shores that says, "You matter to us. Your future is our future. And our moment is now."

America, our moment is now.

Our moment is now.

I don't want to spend the next year or the next four years re-fighting the same fights that we had in the 1990s.

I don't want to pit Red America against Blue America, I want to be the President of the United States of America.

And if those Republicans come at me with the same fear-mongering and swift-boating that they usually do, then I will take them head on. Because I believe the American people are tired of fear and tired of distractions and tired of diversions. We can make this election not about fear, but about the future. And that won't just be a Democratic victory; that will be an American victory.

And that is a victory America needs right now.

I am not in this race to fulfill some long-held ambitions or because I believe it's somehow owed to me. I never expected to be here, I always knew this journey was improbable. I've never been on a journey that wasn't.

I am running in this race because of what Dr. King called "the fierce urgency of now." Because I believe that there's such a thing as being too late. And that hour is almost upon us.

I don't want to wake up four years from now and find out that millions of Americans still lack health care because we couldn't take on the insurance industry.

I don't want to see that the oceans have risen a few more inches. The planet has reached a point of no return because we couldn't find a way to stop buying oil from dictators.

I don't want to see more American lives put at risk because no one had the judgment or the courage to stand up against a misguided war before we sent our troops into fight.

I don't want to see homeless veterans on the streets. I don't want to send another generation of American children to failing schools. I don't want that future for my daughters. I don't want that future for your sons. I do not want that future for America.

I'm in this race for the same reason that I fought for jobs for the jobless and hope for the hopeless on the streets of Chicago; for the same reason I fought for justice and equality as a civil rights lawyer; for the same reason that I fought for Illinois families for over a decade.

Because I will never forget that the only reason that I'm standing here today is because somebody, somewhere stood up for me when it was risky. Stood up when it was hard. Stood up when it wasn't popular. And because that somebody stood up, a few more stood up. And then a few thousand stood up. And then a few million stood up. And standing up, with courage and clear purpose, they somehow managed to change the world.

That's why I'm running, Iowa -- to give our children and grandchildren the same chances somebody gave me.

That's why I'm running, Democrats -- to keep the American Dream alive for those who still hunger for opportunity, who still thirst for equality.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

That's why I'm asking you to stand with me, that's why I'm asking you to caucus for me, that's why I am asking you to stop settling for what the cynics say we have to accept. In this election -- in this moment -- let us reach for what we know is possible. A nation healed. A world repaired. An America that believes again. Thank you very much everybody.

On Sat, Oct 24, 2015 at 9:24 AM, Dan Schwerin <dschwerin@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
Here is latest draft

On Sat, Oct 24, 2015 at 9:01 AM, Huma Abedin <ha16@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
She just called about the JJ speech. Isn't entirely convinced it is the right speech to deliver. I suggest we get on phone with her to discuss. Our only window is 930 for 30 minutes. Hope that works.

This email is intended only for the named addressee. It may contain information that is confidential/private, legally privileged, or copyright-protected, and you should handle it accordingly. If you are not the intended recipient, you do not have legal rights to retain, copy, or distribute this email or its contents, and should promptly delete the email and all electronic copies in your system; do not retain copies in any media. If you have received this email in error, please notify the sender promptly. Thank you.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Tom Matzzie" <tom@zzranch.com>
To:	"Tom Matzzie" <tom@zzranch.com>
Date:	8/19/2008 9:40:47 AM
Subject:	Freedom's Watch enters Senate races--BIG TIME

The lack of a well-funded strategy to deal with the Right-Wing's campaign on oil and energy continues to extract a toll. Now Freedom's Watch enters into Senate races--BIG TIME. Their offensive can still be turned into a liability.

See below. Click the link for the ad.

-Tom

See the ad: http://www.politico.com/blogs/scorecard/0808/Freedoms_Watch_ad_blitz_in_Colorado.html

August 19, 2008
Categories: Colorado

Freedom's Watch ad blitz in Colorado

The conservative group Freedom's Watch is spending a substantial amount of money in the Colorado Senate race to air television ads attacking Democratic congressman Mark Udall for his record on energy.

This is the first time that Freedom's Watch has bought advertising time in a Senate race. The expensive ad buy, airing throughout the state on broadcast and cable television, suggests the group will be well-financed to play a key role in other competitive House and Senate races.

The ad focuses on Udall's absence for a critical Congressional vote that sent Congress into recess without passing any energy legislation. The resolution passed by one vote.

"Instead of supporting oil exploration, nuclear energy, new refineries or anything that might reduce gas prices, Udall skipped work," a narrator in the ad says. "Went to a fundraiser, and sent Congress on vacation by one vote."

Based on the first wave of advertising, it's clear that energy is going to be the dominant theme of this Senate race. The Freedom's Watch ad will be airing as the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee is hitting Schaffer over his ties to major oil companies.

And the League of Conservation Voters, a strong supporter of Udall's, has already been up with ads blasting Schaffer for his support of the oil industry.

Udall, one of Congress' leading environmentalists, has drawn fire from Republicans for reversing his position on offshore oil drilling after long being opposed to such measures. Last week, he came out in favor of bipartisan legislation allowing for offshore drilling as part of a bipartisan, comprehensive energy plan.

By Josh Kraushaar 01:53 PM

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To:	CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date:	10/24/2014 6:53:12 AM
Subject:	Correct The Record Friday October 24, 2014 Afternoon Roundup

Correct The Record Friday October 24, 2014 Afternoon Roundup:

Tweets:

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: Gates: @HillaryClinton "made a singular contribution to strengthening this country's relationships with allies." content.time.com/time/specials/… [10/24/14, 12:36 p.m. EDT]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton has "dedicated her life to empowering women around the world through politics and philanthropy." http://time.com/70904/hillary-clinton-2014-time-100/ … [10/24/14, 11:56 a.m. EDT]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: Malala: "A world with more women leaders will be a better world, and Hillary Clinton is helping make that possible." via @TIME [10/24/14, 11:49 a.m. EDT]

Headlines:

Texas Tribune: UT/TT Poll: Cruz, Perry Lead GOP Presidential Pack

"Democrats, on the other hand, have a straight-up front-runner in Hillary Clinton, who has the support of 60 percent of likely Democratic voters in Texas, according to the poll. She's followed by U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts, at 13 percent, and Vice President Joe Biden, at 10 percent."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CBS News: Rand Paul calls for restraint in U.S. military engagement

“[Rand Paul] called Libya an example of ‘the wrong way to do things,’ criticizing President Obama and Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton for engaging in war without "[anticipating] the consequences.’”

CNN: Rand Paul plants feet between both sides of foreign policy debate

"'For months, Rand Paul has been twisting in the wind, trying to explain his foreign policy vision,' [Michael Czin, press secretary for the Democratic National Committee] said. 'The fact is, a speech defending the indefensible won't make Paul's worldview any more palatable to the American people.'"

The Courier-Journal: Rand Paul: In foreign policy "America cannot disengage"

A potential 2016 Republican presidential candidate, Paul has sought to offer more detailed thoughts on his world view, clearly a deliberate effort to counter his image in some circles as merely an isolationist in different clothing.

Vox: Rand Paul just gave one of the most important foreign policy speeches in decades

“Sen. Rand Paul just gave one of the most important speeches on foreign policy since George W. Bush declared war on Iraq. But instead of declaring war on another country, Paul declared war on his own party. Or, at least, its entire approach to foreign policy.”

The Atlantic: Rand Paul Sketches an Alternative to Hawks Like Bush and Clinton

“On the off-chance that Paul and Hillary Clinton face one another in a presidential election, Thursday's speech offers a portent of Paul attack-ads to come.”

Associated Press, via Wall Street Journal: Poll Shows Martha Coakley Slipping as Hillary Clinton Visits

Hillary Clinton is campaigning with Martha Coakley in Boston, amid a new poll showing the Democratic gubernatorial candidate trailing in the race.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

New York Times: Toxic Partisanship? Bill Clinton Says He Had It Worse Than Obama

“Whatever Mr. Clinton’s motivations, his comments, which he has repeated regularly when the topic comes up, do not permit Mr. Obama to excuse his legislative setbacks by simply citing hyper-partisanship. As one former White House aide to Mr. Clinton put it: ‘They impeached our guy.’”

Articles:

Texas Tribune: UT/TT Poll: Cruz, Perry Lead GOP Presidential Pack

By Ross Ramsey

October 24, 2014

U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz remains the top presidential choice of Texas Republican voters, but Gov. Rick Perry is starting to close the gap between the two, according to the latest University of Texas/Texas Tribune Poll.

It might not seem that way at first glance. While 27 percent of likely Republican voters say Cruz would be their choice in a hypothetical primary for the 2016 presidential nomination, only 14 percent choose Perry. Author and former surgeon Ben Carson is looming in the governor’s rearview mirror, with 10 percent, followed by former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, U.S. Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky and former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, each at 7 percent.

But in the June UT/TT Poll, Perry was running fourth, with 7 percent, while Cruz was way out in front with 33 percent of the respondents at his side. A year ago, Cruz had a 3-to-1 lead over the governor.

“Rick Perry’s political instincts about how to respond to law and order at the border are still pretty good,” said Jim Henson, co-director of the poll and director of the Texas Politics Project at the University of Texas at Austin. “Everyone else is milling around in the middle of the pack.”

Other Republicans included in the survey — U.S. Sens. Paul Ryan of Wisconsin and Marco Rubio of Florida, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, Louisiana Gov. Bobby Jindal, Wisconsin Gov. Scott Walker, former U.S. Sen. Rick Santorum and Ohio Gov. John Kasich — each come in with 4 percent or less. Eleven percent of the likely Republican voters say they haven’t thought enough about the race to have a favorite.

Texas voters have favorable impressions of the two Republicans currently at the top of the GOP pileup, with 44 percent saying they have a very or somewhat favorable opinion of Cruz and 45 percent saying the same about Perry. More than a third of the voters — 36 percent — have an unfavorable opinion of Cruz; 40 percent have an unfavorable impression of Perry.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“This race on the Republican side shows that there is no heir to the throne,” said Daron Shaw, co-director of the poll and a professor of government at UT-Austin. He said the GOP tends to nominate candidates for president who finished in second place four years prior. “There’s no runner-up looking for the title this time.”

Shaw said the numbers are still volatile and the changes in the standings are relatively small. But he added that Perry’s profile is rising some. “You guys in the media love second acts, and Perry is a great second act,” he said.

Democrats, on the other hand, have a straight-up front-runner in Hillary Clinton, who has the support of 60 percent of likely Democratic voters in Texas, according to the poll. She’s followed by U.S. Sen. Elizabeth Warren of Massachusetts, at 13 percent, and Vice President Joe Biden, at 10 percent.

Other potential Democratic candidates — New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo, former Montana Gov. Brian Schweitzer, former U.S. Sen. Jim Webb of Virginia and Maryland Gov. Martin O’Malley — each get support from 2 percent or less of voters, and 13 percent of the Democratic likely voters said they have no favorite.

“The not-Hillary vote is sort of befuddled right now,” Shaw said.

According to the poll, Perry gets better job reviews than either the president or Congress, with 46 percent of Texas voters saying they approve of his performance and 38 percent saying they don’t. Among those who feel strongly about it, 22 percent approve and 27 percent disapprove of the governor’s work in office.

President Obama gets good reviews from 36 percent of Texans and bad reviews from 57 percent. And most of the voters who disapprove — 48 percent — say they strongly disapprove. Only 14 percent strongly approve of his performance.

Texas voters have hard views of Congress, with 14 percent saying they approve of its job performance and 71 percent saying they disapprove. Among those who feel strongly, 2 percent approve and 41 percent disapprove.

“The president remains deeply unpopular, and I think we’re seeing that expressed in races from governor to dog-catcher,” Henson said. “Anyone wondering why the president has been turning up in so many ads on TV can find their answer right here.”

The University of Texas/Texas Tribune internet survey of 1,200 registered voters was conducted from Oct. 10 to Oct. 19 and has an overall margin of error of +/- 2.83 percentage points. Among 866 likely voters in the head-to-head general election races, the margin of error is +/- 3.33 percent. Among 560 likely Republican primary voters, the margin of error is +/- 4.14 percent, and among 429 likely Democratic primary voters, the margin of error is +/- 4.73 percent. Numbers in the charts might not add up to 100 percent because of rounding.

CBS News: Rand Paul calls for restraint in U.S. military engagement

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By Hannah Fraser-Chanpong

October 24, 2014 1:41 a.m. EDT

NEW YORK -- Echoing previous warnings against intervention abroad, Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul is urging the United States to be cautious about using military force and pressed instead for diplomatic settlements.

"Americans want strength and leadership, but it doesn't mean that we see war as the only solution," Paul said Thursday during a dinner hosted by the Center for the National Interest in New York City.

The comments are widely considered to be the potential 2016 Republican presidential candidate's first comprehensive outline of his foreign policy views.

"Yes, we need a hammer ready, but not every civil war is a nail," Paul said. "There is a time to eliminate our enemies but there is also a time to cultivate allies."

Paul described the use of force as "an indispensible part of defending our country" but insisted it should be a last resort and only initiated through Congress.

He called Libya an example of "the wrong way to do things," criticizing President Obama and Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton for engaging in war without "[anticipating] the consequences."

"Today, Libya is a jihadist wonderland, a sanctuary and a safe haven for terror groups across North Africa," Paul said.

On the U.S. strategy to combat ISIS, Paul voiced his support for airstrikes against the terrorist group but rejected supplying Syrian rebel groups with weapons, which he says wind up in enemy hands.

"The ultimate sad irony is that we're forced to fight against the very weapons we send the Syrian rebels," he said. "ISIS is stronger because of our weapons."

Paul also used his speech to push back against critics within his own party who have called his views "isolationist."

"The war on terror is not over, and America cannot disengage from the world," Paul said.

He called his approach to foreign policy "common sense conservative realism," and a "return to traditional Republican values."

Paul is considering a bid for the presidency, but recent reports, including one Thursday based on an interview aboard his flight to New York for the event, say he will not make a decision until next spring.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

CNN: Rand Paul plants feet between both sides of foreign policy debate

By Ashley Killough

October 24, 2014

(CNN) -- For the first time since facing an onslaught of criticism this year over his foreign policy views, Sen. Rand Paul spelled out his national security principles Thursday in a comprehensive speech.

The Kentucky Republican, who's aggressively laying groundwork for a potential presidential campaign, sought to paint himself as a champion of "conservative realism," a doctrine that skates between the hawkish and dovish ends of the foreign policy spectrum.

"Yes, we need a hammer ready, but not every civil war is a nail," he said in New York at the Center for the National Interest, a think-tank founded by former President Richard Nixon.

"We need a foreign policy that recognized our limits, preserves our might and a common sense conservative realism of strength and action," he added.

Paul attempted to address critics that characterize his views as isolationist and was aiming to approach his speech Thursday from the perspective of a major, would-be U.S. leader, rather than a lawmaker, a spokesman told CNN before the speech.

He sketched out how and when he would advocate for the use of force, saying he would only do so if he felt the United States or its interests were threatened. He said he supported the response to al Qaeda after 9/11, for example, but disagrees with the continued U.S. presence in Afghanistan.

"It's hard to understand our current objective. Stalemate and perpetual policing seems to be our mission now in Afghanistan, Iraq, Syria," he said. " A precondition for the use of force must be a clear end and a goal."

He went on to underscore his widely known position that a president should seek authorization from Congress before taking military action. Paul recycled his own criticism that President Barack Obama, "urged on by (former Secretary of State) Hillary Clinton," took action in Libya without approval, yet now the country is a "sanctuary for terror groups across North Africa."

"America shouldn't fight wars where the best outcome is stalemate."

"America shouldn't fight wars where the best outcome is stalemate. America shouldn't fight wars when there is no plan for victory. America shouldn't fight wars that aren't authorized by the American people," he said.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"America should and will fight wars when the consequences -- intended and unintended -- are worth the sacrifice," he continued. "The war on terror is not over, and America cannot disengage from the world."

He also talked at length about maintaining diplomatic relationships abroad and expressed support for using sanctions to underwrite diplomacy against countries such as Russia and Iran. And he reiterated a stance he has consistently taken: that the country's debt is one of its biggest national security threats.

His speech comes as he attempts to further distance himself from the more libertarian views trumpeted by his father, three-time presidential candidate and former congressman Ron Paul. With an eye on the presidency, Rand Paul has sought to broaden his appeal to establishment Republicans and even Democrats.

The attention has attracted close scrutiny of his views and past statements on foreign policy, as Paul has been known to frequently break with his own party and lean toward staying out of foreign entanglements. (Last month he slammed hawkish lawmakers for being "barnacled enablers" that have "never met a war they didn't like.")

He was widely panned this year when he evolved in his opinion about the crisis in Ukraine, as well as the threat of ISIS in the Middle East, as both situations continued to worsen.

On ISIS, for example, he penned an opinion piece earlier this summer openly questioning the value of launching airstrikes against militants in Iraq.

But not long after the beheading of American James Foley, Paul became supportive of a U.S.-led air campaign against the terrorist organization -- a change that critics made sure to highlight as a massive flip-flop but what Paul reluctantly admitted as a change in views based on the situation at hand, the "realist" side of his worldview.

Thursday night, he stressed his support for airstrikes as a way to "rebalance" the region but reiterated his opposition to another key part of Obama's strategy: arming Syrian rebels to fight ISIS militants.

He expressed doubt that ISIS will be dismantled in the future, saying in the end it will be up to the countries in the region to take care of the situation.

Michael Czin, press secretary for the Democratic National Committee, argued that Paul won't be able to overcome confusion about Paul's foreign policy with just one speech.

"For months, Rand Paul has been twisting in the wind, trying to explain his foreign policy vision," he said. "The fact is, a speech defending the indefensible won't make Paul's worldview any more palatable to the American people."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

By James R. Carroll

October 24, 2014 12:46 p.m. EDT

WASHINGTON - In what was billed as a major foreign policy speech, Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul Thursday told a New York foreign policy think tank that "America cannot disengage from the world," but its actions should recognize limits and be governed by "conservative realism."

A potential 2016 Republican presidential candidate, Paul has sought to offer more detailed thoughts on his world view, clearly a deliberate effort to counter his image in some circles as merely an isolationist in different clothing.

Paul addressed the Center for the National Interest Thursday evening, offering a perspective on international affairs that ranged widely and drew from multiple sources, including historian Francis Fukuyama, President Ronald Reagan, foreign policy theorist-historian George F. Kennan, young Pakistani activist Malala Yousafzai and others.

We are going to reprint the text of the speech here, but first wanted to note that the Democratic National Committee already has dismissed his remarks as another example of the senator's political and philosophical inconsistency.

The DNC said that the Kentuckian previously had characterized himself as a "constitutional conservative," "libertarian conservative," "originalist," "realist," "libertarian-ish," "moderate on the foreign-policy spectrum" and "non-interventionist."

"For months, Rand Paul has been twisting in the wind, trying to explain his foreign policy vision," DNC Press Secretary Michael Czin said in a statement. "The fact is, a speech defending the indefensible won't make Paul's worldview any more palatable to the American people."

"Paul's been clear about his goal: he wants to see America retreat from our responsibilities around the world," Czin said. "That includes support for a fringe proposal to end our membership in the United Nations, ending all aid to our allies like Israel and slashing programs that help developing nations combat major public health crises."

But anti-tax crusader Grover Norquist was reported on Twitter as saying after Paul's remarks, "I think I just heard Ronald Reagan speaking."

That prompted Bill Kristol, editor of the conservative Weekly Standard, to tweet: "No, that was George McGovern." That's a reference to the late senator from South Dakota (and decorated World War II bomber pilot) who was the 1972 Democratic Party presidential nominee who campaigned against the Vietnam War.

So you can see Paul did not settle the debate over the brand of his foreign policy, even among conservatives.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Vox: Rand Paul just gave one of the most important foreign policy speeches in decades

By Zack Beauchamp

October 24, 2014 11:10 a.m. EDT

Sen. Rand Paul just gave one of the most important speeches on foreign policy since George W. Bush declared war on Iraq. But instead of declaring war on another country, Paul declared war on his own party. Or, at least, its entire approach to foreign policy.

In his address last night at the Center for the National Interest — a think tank founded by Richard Nixon — Paul gave, for the first time, a comprehensive picture of how he thinks about foreign policy. His moderate non-interventionism is a far cry from his father's absolutist desire for America to exit the world stage. But Paul's stance is light years away from the hyper-hawk neoconservatism that's dominated Republican foreign policy thinking for decades.

Paul is signaling that, when he runs for president in 2016, he isn't going to move toward the Republican foreign policy consensus; he's going to run at it, with a battering ram. If he wins, he could remake the Republican Party as we know it. But if he loses, this speech may well be the reason.

Paul tacks to Obama's right — but not the way you think

In the speech, Paul outlined four basic principles for conducting foreign policy.

First, "war is necessary when America is attacked or threatened, when vital American interests are attacked and threatened, and when we have exhausted all other measures short of war." But not otherwise.

Second, "Congress, the people's representative, must authorize the decision to intervene." No more war without express authorization.

Third, "peace and security require a commitment to diplomacy and leadership." That means expanding trade ties and diplomatic links around the world.

Fourth, "we are only as strong as our economy." For Paul, the national debt and slow growth are national security crises.

In the abstract, this doesn't tell you a whole lot about what Paul believes. But when he gives specific examples of where he agrees and disagrees with Obama's policy, the core idea becomes clearer: Paul wants to scale down American commitments to foreign wars.

Paul endorses the original decision to invade Afghanistan, but criticizes Obama's decision to escalate it. He savaged the Libya intervention, calling Libya today "a jihadist wonderland." He supports bombing ISIS, but blasted Obama's decision to arm the Syrian rebels: "the weapons are either indiscriminately given to 'less than moderate rebels' or simply taken from moderates by ISIS."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

But Paul also, much more quietly, agrees with major parts of the Obama agenda. In a move that's bound to infuriate Republican hardliners, he's calling for negotiations with Iran over its nuclear program. He tacitly endorsed Obama's sanction-and-negotiate approach to the Ukraine crisis. And he called for a peaceful, cooperative relationship with China.

In Paul's ideal world, America only very rarely engages in war. Most of its relations with foreign powers are conducted via diplomacy and trade with other states. This is hardly a detailed theory of how to conduct American foreign policy, but it is absolutely a conservative vision for ramping down America's role in the world.

The Obama-bashing reveals Paul's real target: the GOP

Paul's agenda has a lot more in common with Barack Obama's view of the world than it does with, say, John McCain's. But his speech very cleverly played up the criticisms of Obama, and minimized the points of agreement. That's because the basic goal of the speech was to teach conservatives that they can oppose foreign wars and Democrats at the same time.

The real target of Paul's speech were the neoconservatives: the wing of the GOP that believes that American foreign policy should be about the aggressive use of American force and influence, be it against terrorist groups or Russia. Paul's unsubtle argument is that this view, dominant in the GOP, is a departure from what a conservative foreign policy ought to be.

His tactic for selling this argument is innovative. He's reframed arguments with neoconservatives as arguments with Obama, banking on the idea that he can get everyday Republicans to abandon hawkishness altogether if they see Obama as a hawk. "After the tragedies of Iraq and Libya, Americans are right to expect more from their country when we go to war," Paul said, clearly linking his critique of Obama to an attack on the Bush legacy.

Until this speech, Paul's 2016 foreign policy positions hadn't been clear. Now it is. Rand "clearly wants a more restrained US foreign policy," says Dan McCarthy, the editor of The American Conservative magazine. According to McCarthy, who's talked about these issues with Paul's staff, Paul has been engaged in a "trial and error" experiment. The idea is to figure out how to make a less aggressive foreign policy politically viable in the Republican Party.

After this speech, the testing phase appears to be over. According to his advisors, this speech represents the final, overarching framework for Paul's worldview. Rand has developed a strategy for wrenching conservatives away from the Bush legacy, and it's now a question of implementing it.

The stakes in the Paul-GOP fight are tectonic

Paul is setting the terms of the 2016 election. So far, every plausible Republican nominee who's spoken about foreign policy has taken a more hawkish tack. Paul has picked a fight on foreign policy, and now he's going to get one.

The Republican primary, then, will be at least partly a referendum on the future of Republican foreign policy. If Paul wins the primary — let alone the presidency — then the GOP and its elected officials will have to line up behind him. That will mean defending his foreign policy against Democrats, who will likely blast Paul from an interventionist point of view.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Paul's been clear about his goal," DNC Press Secretary Michael Czin told reporters before the speech. "He wants to see America retreat from our responsibilities around the world." A Paul primary win would force Republicans around the country to line up behind Paul's non-interventionism against these attacks. It might also lead the Democratic Party to become more hawkish as it unites against Paul's philosophies — and that's particularly true if Hillary Clinton, who is already on the more hawkish side of the Democratic spectrum, is the nominee.

"Rand is the first guy," McCarthy says, "to have a chance to come in and do something different than what our foreign policy has been doing in 70 or more years." He's not wrong.

The Atlantic: Rand Paul Sketches an Alternative to Hawks Like Bush and Clinton

By Conor Friedersdorf

October 23, 2014 8:00 p.m. EDT

[Subtitle:] In a speech touting "conservative realism," the Kentucky Republican probed the failures of post-9/11 foreign policy, including too much war.

"Americans yearn for leadership and for strength," Senator Rand Paul planned to declare in a foreign policy speech Thursday evening, "but they don't yearn for war."

His remarks (quoted as prepared for delivery at New York City gathering of the Center for the National Interest), were seemingly pitched to Republican voters: the Kentucky Republican dubbed his approach "conservative realism," criticized President Obama and Hillary Clinton, and invoked Presidents Reagan and Eisenhower. But the substance of his speech seems likely to appeal to anyone who believes that U.S. foreign policy has gone astray since 9/11, due largely to imprudent interventions urged by George W. Bush, Barack Obama, and Hillary Clinton. Big parts of his message should appeal to constituencies as diverse as Code Pink and my Orange County-conservative grandparents. "After the tragedies of Iraq and Libya, Americans are right to expect more from their country when we go to war," Paul stated. "America shouldn't fight wars where the best outcome is stalemate. America shouldn't fight wars when there is no plan for victory."

He condemned wars waged without the consent of Congress or the people. adding: "Until we develop the ability to distinguish, as George Kennan put it, between vital interests and more peripheral interests, we will continue to drift from crisis to crisis." But he also took care to preempt the charge that he's an "isolationist."

In passages that may alienate some of his father's supporters, Paul expressed his support for the invasion of Afghanistan (if not the decade-plus occupation that followed), declared that "the war on terror is not over, and America cannot disengage from the world," and reiterated his support for airstrikes to weaken ISIS. He opposes funneling arms to rebels in Syria, arguing that they often end up in enemy hands. But even his support for airstrikes is arguably at odds with the principles he laid out elsewhere. "Although I support the call for defeating and destroying ISIS," the speech said, "I doubt that a decisive victory is possible in the short term, even with the participation of the Kurds, the Iraqi government, and other moderate Arab states." What happened to, "America shouldn't fight wars where the best outcome is stalemate. America shouldn't fight wars when there is no plan for victory"?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The uncharitable interpretation of this tension is that, slowly but surely, Paul is going the way of Obama and succumbing to Beltway interventionism, whether as a response to D.C. culture or a gambit to win a GOP primary. The more charitable interpretation: He isn't ideologically committed to either interventionism or noninterventionism, but is simply less hawkish than Bush, Obama, or Clinton.

Either way, his rhetoric laid out an approach to foreign policy that is less bad than anything on offer from any other plausible party leader in Washington, D.C. It retains some of the idealism that candidate Barack Obama won with in 2012. "To contain and ultimately defeat radical Islam," Paul argued, "America must have confidence in our constitutional republic, our leadership, and our values."

In another passage, Paul tried to make a point sensitive and complicated enough that few American politicians even attempt it: that Americans should be wary of a foreign policy that produces blowback; that it cannot always be avoided; that anger at actions like needlessly killing innocents in drone strikes creates anti-American terrorists; and that there are other, more complicated causes of terrorism too:

We must understand that a hatred of our values exists, and acknowledge that interventions in foreign countries may well exacerbate this hatred," he says, "but that ultimately, we must be willing and able to defend our country and our interests. As Reagan said: “When action is required to preserve our national security, we will act.” Will they hate us less if we are less present? Perhaps …. but hatred for those outside the circle of "accepted" Islam, be it the Shia or Sunni or other religions, such as Christianity, exists above and beyond our history of intervention overseas.

The world does not have an Islam problem.

The world has a dignity problem, with millions of men and women across the Middle East being treated as chattel by their own governments. Many of these same governments have been chronic recipients of our aid. When the anger boils over as it did in Cairo, the anger is directed not only against Mubarak but also against the United States because of our support for Mubarak.

Some anger is blowback, but some anger originates in an aberrant and intolerant distortion of religion that wages war against all infidels. We can’t be sentimental about neutralizing that threat, but we also can’t be blind to the fact that drone strikes that inadvertently kill civilians may create more jihadists than we eliminate.

On the off-chance that Paul and Hillary Clinton face one another in a presidential election, Thursday's speech offers a portent of Paul attack-ads to come:

The war in Libya was not in our national interest. It had no clear goal and it led to less stability. Today, Libya is a jihadist wonderland, a sanctuary and safe haven for terror groups across North Africa. Our Ambassador was assassinated and our Embassy forced to flee over land to Tunisia. Jihadists today swim in our Embassy swimming pool. The Obama administration, urged on by Hillary Clinton, wanted to go to war but didn't anticipate the consequences of war.

Libya is now more chaotic and America is less safe.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

If Democrats were earnest in their critiques of George W. Bush's foreign policy, they ought to prefer Paul's vision on foreign policy to Hillary Clinton's platform and record. If Republicans were earnest in their embrace of a humble foreign policy in 2000, they ought to prefer Paul's positions to what's on offer from his GOP rivals.

But the partisan mind has led many Republicans to retroactively embrace Bush's radical foreign policy and many Democrats to forgive Iraq War support and embrace Obama's drone strikes and wars of choice. Paul is questioning the hawkish, post-9/11 consensus that exists in both parties, but not as radically as Code Pink or supporters of his father would hope. Are moderates open to the change he is urging? If so, he will be a contender in 2016, if only by virtue of offering a position that appeals to many in America but is embraced by few in Washington.

Associated Press, via Wall Street Journal: Poll Shows Martha Coakley Slipping as Hillary Clinton Visits

Hillary Clinton is campaigning with Martha Coakley in Boston, amid a new poll showing the Democratic gubernatorial candidate trailing in the race.

The former secretary of state, senator, first lady and likely 2016 presidential candidate will join Ms. Coakley on Friday at the Park Plaza hotel. Mrs. Clinton’s visit comes after her husband, former President Bill Clinton, campaigned for Ms. Coakley in Worcester last week.

Mrs. Clinton then heads to Providence, Rhode Island, to campaign for Democratic gubernatorial candidate and state treasurer Gina Raimondo.

Ms. Coakley, the state’s attorney general, is looking to regain momentum in her race with Republican candidate Charlie Baker that has drawn national attention — and star power.

First Lady Michelle Obama also campaigned for Ms. Coakley in Boston’s Dorchester neighborhood earlier this month, and Vice President Joe Biden will headline a fundraiser on Oct. 29.

Mr. Baker, a former CEO of Harvard Pilgrim Healthcare, meanwhile, has had former Massachusetts governor and presidential candidate Mitt Romney and New Jersey Governor Chris Christie, head of the Republican Governors Association and a possible 2016 presidential candidate, stump for him this year.

Recent polls suggest Mr. Baker’s campaign has gained momentum as the Nov. 4 election approaches.

A poll released by the Boston Globe on Thursday showed Mr. Baker with the support of 45% of those polled compared to 36% for Ms. Coakley, a 9 percentage point advantage in a survey that carried a margin of error of 4 percentage points. The live telephone survey of 500 likely Massachusetts voters was conducted between Oct. 19 and Oct. 22, according to the Globe.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Ms. Coakley's campaign released a statement calling the Globe poll an "outlier" and said other public surveys, as well as the campaign's own internal polling suggested, suggested a much closer race.

Democrats are looking to gain ground in state houses across the country this year. The party currently holds 21 governor's offices to Republicans' 29. There are 36 gubernatorial elections this November.

Ms. Coakley also is looking to erase the memory of her surprise 2010 defeat to then-state Sen. Scott Brown in the special election to succeed the late U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy in Congress.

Three independent candidates are also on the Massachusetts ballot.

New York Times: Toxic Partisanship? Bill Clinton Says He Had It Worse Than Obama

By Amy Chozick

October 24, 2014

President Obama heads into midterm elections in which he may face crushing losses. He has been spurned by his own party, whose candidates do not even want to be seen with him. The president's supporters say the toxic atmosphere in Washington has made it impossible for Mr. Obama to succeed.

But there is a counter view being offered by a former Democratic president that as far as personal attacks go, he, Bill Clinton, had it worse. "Nobody's accused him of murder yet, as far as I know. I mean, it was pretty rough back then," Mr. Clinton said last month in an interview aired by PBS, when asked about the partisan climate facing Mr. Obama.

Whatever Mr. Clinton's motivations, his comments, which he has repeated regularly when the topic comes up, do not permit Mr. Obama to excuse his legislative setbacks by simply citing hyper-partisanship. As one former White House aide to Mr. Clinton put it: "They impeached our guy."

The tumult of the Clinton years — including conspiracy theories about the death of Vincent W. Foster Jr., a deputy White House counsel and friend of the Clintons' from Arkansas who committed suicide in 1993, the investigation into Whitewater, the Monica Lewinsky scandal and impeachment — has come back as Hillary Rodham Clinton inches toward a run for president in 2016.

When asked last month what the single biggest misconception about his presidency was, Mr. Clinton told Charlie Rose on PBS, "I think that most people underappreciate the level of extreme partisanship that took hold in '94."

Twenty years later, Mr. Clinton has devoted much of his energy to campaigning for Democrats who do not want to be associated with Mr. Obama. He spent the weekend in Arkansas campaigning for Senator Mark Pryor, the incumbent Democrat who is locked in a tight race against Representative Tom Cotton, a Republican.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“Everyone looks at Clinton in this hazy glow of, ‘He’s so wonderful,’ ” said Steve Elmendorf, a Democratic strategist. “But when he was president, boy, were there a lot of people who went after him in a very personal, some would say dirty, way.”

Even Mr. Clinton’s old rival, Newt Gingrich, a former Republican speaker of the House, said people had a gauzy view of the Clinton years. “Everyone is doing the, ‘Gee, Newt and Bill got things done, why can’t Obama get anything done?’ routine,” Mr. Gingrich said. “Maybe it’s driving Bill nuts.”

The underlying implication is that Mr. Obama does not have it so rough. Republicans who voted to impeach Mr. Clinton criticize the current president for being less able or willing than his Democratic predecessor to woo congressional Republicans.

Trent Lott, the Mississippi Republican who served as Senate majority leader from 1996 to 2001, said Mr. Clinton was “affable” and “approachable,” even toward his political opponents.

“You could talk to him,” Mr. Lott said. “He was also willing to make a deal for the good of the country.” In contrast, he argued, Mr. Obama “has just walked away” — so if Mr. Clinton even tried to give the current president a pass, it “just won’t sell.”

Congressional Republicans, of course, have also refused to reach across the aisle and work with Mr. Obama the way they did in Mr. Lott’s era. The current Congress is on track to become one of the least legislatively productive in recent history. That is partly because Mr. Obama faces a far more polarized electorate than Mr. Clinton did.

Over the past 20 years, the number of Americans who hold extreme conservative or liberal views has doubled from 10 percent in 1994 to 21 percent in 2014, according to the Pew Research Center. And the middle ground has shrunk, with 39 percent of Americans taking a roughly equal number of liberal and conservative positions, compared with 49 percent in 1994.

Mr. Clinton often talks about this polarization and says that while the partisan gridlock is worse today, and the American electorate is less willing to hear arguments they disagree with, the attacks he faced were more personal than those Mr. Obama has experienced.

In a 2012 interview with The New York Times, Mr. Clinton mentioned the “murder” conspiracy theory in the 1990s, and said of Mr. Obama’s tenure: “Nobody has tried to bankrupt him with bogus investigations, so it’s not quite as bad. But the political impasse has gone on longer.”

“I will certainly not contradict the president I worked for when he argues that it was even more personal then,” said William A. Galston, a former policy adviser to Mr. Clinton. “But the polarization of our official political institutions and our political parties has become even more acute than in the Clinton days,” he added.

That argument absolves Mr. Clinton of his own part in the scandals of the 1990s, several historians said. “They’re different situations because there were criminal allegations” against Mr. Clinton, said Ken Gormley, the author of “The Death of American Virtue: Clinton vs. Starr,” about the investigation led by Kenneth W. Starr.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

“President Obama has attracted a lot of attacks when it’s hard to point to something exactly he has done that warranted them,” Mr. Gormley added.

Some of the venom directed at Mr. Obama has a racial component that Mr. Clinton, a relatable white Southerner, never had to deal with, said Douglas G. Brinkley, a presidential historian and professor at Rice University. “The Clintons created huge problems of their own making,” Mr. Brinkley added, while “Obama’s problem is that he bullheadedly pushed Obamacare, and he happens to be African-American.”

“You can’t get more personal than questioning a person’s veracity for where he was born,” said Mr. Galston, the former Clinton aide, referring to the “birther” conspiracy theories about Mr. Obama’s birth certificate.

Mr. Clinton’s reminders about how bitter things were in Washington when he was in the White House might not be the best message as Mrs. Clinton eyes an attempt at getting back there, as president herself this time.

Senator Rand Paul, a potential 2016 Republican presidential candidate, has already seized on the Lewinsky scandal as a way to remind voters that the Clinton years were not just “peace and prosperity,” as Mrs. Clinton often characterized her husband’s presidency during her 2008 presidential campaign.

Mr. Clinton is not the only president who weathered harsh attacks. Harry Reid, the Senator majority leader, called former President George W. Bush a “liar” and a “loser,” and protesters depicted him as Hitler.

“Every president probably thinks he had it worse than all his predecessors,” said Kenneth L. Khachigian, a Republican strategist who served as a speechwriter for Ronald Reagan and Richard Nixon. “But,” he added, “those of us in the Nixon years would have gladly traded places with Bill Clinton’s White House.”

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace" <info@centerpeace.org>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 11/3/2015 8:20:43 AM
Subject: News Update - November 3

S. DANIEL ABRAHAM
CENTER FOR MIDDLE EAST PEACE

Israel and the Middle East News Update

Tuesday, November 3

Click here for a printer-friendly version.

Headlines:

- 70 Year-Old Man Stabbed in Netanya; 3 People Hurt in Rishon Letzion
- Beilin Predicts Bibi Will Unilaterally Withdraw from Much of West Bank
- Police Commander: More Difficult to Protect Terrorists from Mob
- IDF Shut Down Palestinian Radio Station It Says Incites Violence
- Former IDF Chief Gantz: We Will Always Live with Our Sword
- Herzog to UK Envoy: Labeling Settlement Products 'Rewards Terror'
- Israel Hints at Air Force Cooperation with Jordan, Egypt
- Lower Threshold for Terrorism Incitement Passes Knesset

Commentary:

- Forward: "Israel's Top Generals Split with Bibi on Roots of Terror Wave"
  - By J.J. Goldberg, Editor-at-Large, Forward
- Al-Monitor: "How Will Jewish-Palestinian Relations Be Restored?"
  - By Shlomi Eldar, Israel Pulse Columnist, Al-Monitor

Ha'aretz

70 Year-Old Man Stabbed in Netanya; 3 Hurt in Rishon Letzion

Four people were wounded in two stabbing attacks in central Israel yesterday. A 70 year-old man was seriously wounded in a stabbing attack in the coastal city of Netanya, while a 31 year-old man and 80 year-old woman were critically injured earlier in the day in an attack in Rishon Letzion. A man in his twenties was slightly injured in the earlier attack. The assailants in both attacks were apprehended by police. A 22 year-old Palestinian man was shot by police on the scene in Netanya yesterday evening. The assailant, from the Tul Karm area, was in Israel illegally.
See also, "Two Elderly Israelis Stabbed in Latest Palestinian Attacks" (CBS News)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Times of Israel

Beilin Predicts Bibi Will Withdraw from Much of West Bank

Former minister and veteran peace activist Yossi Beilin on Monday called for the creation of an Israeli-Palestinian confederation as a long-term strategic goal for the solution of the conflict. Such a solution will have to be preceded by an interim agreement that would create a Palestinian state in provisional borders, he said. However, he said Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, anxious to avoid a bi-national state but unwilling to meet Palestinian demands, would wind up unilaterally withdrawing from much of the West Bank to ensure a Jewish majority in Israel.

Ma'ariv

Police Commander: More Difficult to Protect Terrorists from Mob

Commander of the Central District Police Cmdr. Motti Cohen spoke to Army Radio in the wake of the two attempts to attack terrorists, saying: it is getting more difficult to protect the terrorist from the mob than to protect the mob from the terrorist. Cohen: "In this case, several dozen people tried to take the law into their own hands and to attack the terrorist. The police coped with this, and removed the citizens. In this case, the activity [to extricate the attacker] was no less difficult, maybe even more complicated, than ending the incident."

See also, "As Terror Continues, More Angry Bystanders Attack Terrorists" (Arutz Sheva)

Huffington Post

IDF Shut Down Palestinian Radio Station It Says Incites Violence

The Israeli military raided a Palestinian radio station in the West Bank on Tuesday and confiscated equipment it said was being used to broadcast calls to attack Israelis. The military said it shut down the Al Hurria radio station in Hebron overnight and accused it of inciting violence in the volatile West Bank city. The station's director, Ayman Qawasmeh, said Israel troops raided the station after 2 a.m. destroyed equipment and confiscated transmitters. "This is a clear violent aggression on the Palestinian media," he said. "We didn't incite, we just reported the Israeli daily crimes against our people in Hebron. They want to silence our voice."

See also, "Citing Incitement, IDF Shuts Down Fatah-Affiliated Radio Station in Hebron" (Jerusalem Post)

Jerusalem Post

Former IDF Chief Gantz: We Will Always Live with Our Sword

The security uncertainty that hovers over Israel will continue, and security challenges will not vanish overnight, but Israel is strong, and should strive to achieve diplomatic progress with the Palestinians, former IDF chief of staff Lt.-Gen. Benny Gantz said on Monday. Speaking at a security conference organized by the Institute for National Security Studies at the Sapir Academic College in Sderot, Gantz said, "Will we forever live by our sword? We definitely will live with our sword. I don't think our children or grandchildren won't be soldiers. We must make efforts to try and not live only by our sword, but we will always be with a sword."

See also, "A Year After Gaza War, Israel's Military Experts Wonder: Was It Worth It?" (Times of Israel)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Times of Israel

Herzog to Envoy: Labeling Settlement Products Rewards Terror

Opposition leader Isaac Herzog tells British Ambassador to Israel David Quarrey that a European Union plan to mark products made in factories over the Green Line is "a prize for terror." The EU will soon decide exactly how to label the products, after the European Parliament passed a resolution last month to approve the measure. Herzog says he "strongly opposes this harmful and unnecessary measure," saying that "this is a measure that serves only one purpose – continuing the hate and regional conflict. Marking these products is an act of violence by extremists who want to further inflame the situation and the EU is falling into their trap."

See also, "EU to Publish Guidelines for Labeling Goods Produced in West Bank Settlements" (i24 News)

Ynet News

Israel Hints at Air Force Cooperation with Jordan, Egypt

Israeli fighter pilots recently trained with Arab counterparts in the United States, Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon said on Tuesday, referring to a joint exercise that a US official described as involving Jordanian planes. The remarks by Ya'alon followed Israel's disclosure that its air force helped locate a Russian passenger plane that crashed in the Egyptian Sinai—both rare departures from a policy of keeping Israeli-Arab military cooperation under wraps. Bruised by an Iranian nuclear deal that it had lobbied against, and hoping to skirt deadlocked Palestinian peace talks through wider regional engagement, Israel has been hinting it enjoys burgeoning secret ties with some Arab powers.

Jerusalem Post

Lower Threshold for Terrorism Incitement Passes Knesset

Legislation creating a separate, easier-to-prosecute crime of incitement to terror, as opposed to general incitement to violence, passed a first reading in the Knesset overnight Monday. The penal code currently establishes that incitement to violence or terrorism, which carries a five year prison sentence, is when someone publicizes a call to an act of violence or terrorism, or praises, sympathizes with or encourages such acts, and the statements have a real chance of causing someone to behave violently or commit an act of terrorism. The new bill creates a separate crime of incitement to terrorism, which would not require the prosecution to prove the probability of the statements causing someone to commit an act of terrorism.

See also, "Knesset Approves Minimum Jail Time for Rock Throwing" (Times of Israel)

Forward – November 3, 2015

Israel's Top Generals Split with Bibi on Roots of Terror Wave

By J.J. Goldberg

Benjamin Netanyahu probably thinks he got the last laugh after the international uproar he touched off with his "Hitler didn't want to exterminate the Jews" speech on October 20. But he just might have opened up a whole new can of worms.

The Israeli prime minister was bombarded with criticism by everyone from Knesset opposition leader Isaac Herzog to German Chancellor Angela Merkel over his claim that the extermination idea was first proposed to Hitler by the

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Palestinian leader Haj Amin al-Husseini, the grand mufti of Jerusalem. The critics all said it was a historical untruth, a distortion of the Holocaust and a diminishment of the evil of Nazism. Merkel went as far as to rebuke Netanyahu and insist that Germans, not someone else, bore responsibility for the Holocaust.

Netanyahu, it turned out, was quick to concede the main point. He never meant to suggest that Hitler wasn't responsible for the Holocaust, he said the next day . A week later he conceded further that the genocide idea hadn't come from the mufti. He said he merely wanted to point out that Husseini, a founding father of Palestinian nationalism, was an enthusiastic accomplice of Hitler's and that genocidal, Nazi-style anti-Semitism was the primary motivating force in his opposition to Zionism. And that today's Palestinian leadership continues to revere Husseini and his legacy.

And with that, the subject was more or less closed. Critics around the world, it seems, were satisfied that Netanyahu understood the magnitude of Hitler's crime. All he was really trying to say was that Palestinian nationalism traces its roots to genocidal anti-Semitism. And to world opinion such an imputation apparently isn't a problem. So Netanyahu came out a winner from the seeming embarrassment. He discredited the current Palestinian leadership under Mahmoud Abbas as being politically descended from those who admired genocide. A good day's work.

Coincidentally or not, however, voices have been raised in a most unlikely corner to insist that Palestinian hostility to Israel — including Palestinian terrorist violence — is at least partly a response to Israeli actions and policies, and not simply a deep-seated hatred of Jews. That corner is the Israel Defense Forces.

In the days after Netanyahu's speech, two active-duty IDF generals who are among the army's top experts on Palestinian affairs spoke out publicly to state that Palestinian violence is driven to a considerable degree by anger at Israeli actions. One of the two went a step further, warning that only a serious Israeli diplomatic re-engagement with the Palestinians will help to quell such violence over the long term.

This might seem like more of the same-old, same-old that we've been hearing for several years now: questioning of Netanyahu's policies by senior figures in the Israeli defense establishment. But it's not. This is something new.

Up to now, almost all public pushback from the security community has come from retired ex-service chiefs who are now private citizens and free to speak their minds. Their unanimity may well tell us something important about Israeli defense doctrine, as I've argued before. And indeed, many of them remain in close touch and intimately involved as reservists in current military and intelligence activity.

But there's a difference when active-duty generals speak out. IDF generals — unlike, say, Israeli cabinet ministers — are not free to spout off publicly with opinions that contradict their immediate bosses. When they do speak out, therefore, their views can be assumed to reflect those of the IDF command. Accordingly, for a high-ranking, active-duty general to voice a view that's at odds with strongly held views of the prime minister is nothing less than shocking, because it's the voice of the IDF. And that's what has started happening now.

The first general to speak out was Major General Nitzan Alon, currently chief of the General Staff Operations Directorate. He moved up last May after nearly a decade as commander of Israel's military presence in the West Bank — first as commander of the Judea-Samaria Division, then as chief of Central Command. Alon testified on October 22 in a trial involving two settlers accused of incitement for publishing the Kahanist-leaning Jewish Voice website.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Some of the motivation of the Palestinians to carry out terror attacks is due to the violence of right-wing elements in the West Bank," Alon told the court, according to Ha'aretz and numerous other news sources.

"In my understanding there are many reasons for Palestinian violence, some of them related to the murderous behavior of the terrorists, some related to religious and nationalistic motives, and a certain part, not the main part, that is related to revenge activity due to the activity of Israelis against Palestinians," Alon was quoted as saying.

He also said that "a significant part of Israeli violence against Palestinians stems from Palestinian violence against Israelis. Some of the incidents are revenge for terror or violence." In other words, we are witnessing what's known in the West — much to the displeasure of the Israeli and pro-Israel right — as a cycle of violence.

The second general to cause waves was Brigadier General Guy Goldstein, deputy chief of the Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories. That's the IDF unit in charge of maintaining relations between the military, as legal sovereign in the territories (under Israeli law, the territories aren't annexed to Israel but rather are held by the army), and Palestinian civil authorities.

Speaking October 28 at an academic conference in Netanya on rehabilitation of Gaza, Goldstein said that the wave of Palestinian terrorist violence plaguing Israel would not disappear — though it might rise and fall in intensity — "unless there is some significant change, partly if not mostly on the diplomatic front."

"What Israel is facing is not a wave of escalation," Goldstein was quoted as saying. "but a confrontation that is expected to continue if not intensify and bring changes in the Palestinian arena. Even if there's a certain calming in terrorism and disturbances, without a diplomatic process all the conditions for a continuation of the confrontation will remain and are expected to erupt again. The central challenge: the ability of the Palestinian Authority to control the confrontation. Over time the risk grows that it will lose control and stability will be undermined."

Of the two generals' comments, Goldstein's caused the greater public uproar. As deputy chief of the Coordinator's office, he can only say what his bosses say — his immediate superior, chief coordinator Major General Yoav "Paulie" Mordechai, and above him the chief of staff, Lieutenant General Gadi Eizenkot.

What Goldstein did was to give the public a rare peek at what the military and intelligence chiefs are telling the prime minister and the cabinet in closed sessions. Now we know exactly what the Netanyahu government is hearing from the people whom it pays to read and understand the events on the ground. Hearing — yet ignoring.

Rephrased in plain English (the comments above are my translation from Goldstein's Hebrew), Goldstein is saying that force alone, the government's current response to the unrest, will not bring calm. And by implication, that there are diplomatic options — viable options from the standpoint of Israeli security as the army reads it — that the government is choosing not to pursue.

But while Goldstein's comments are more sweeping, Nitzan Alon's may be more telling, if only because they signal the return one of the IDF's fastest rising stars to the public eye for a moment. During his long tenure as the IDF's chief face to the West Bank, he was enormously unpopular among the settlers. He was considered a leftist, hostile to the settlers, overly sympathetic to Palestinian rights. They grumbled, correctly, that his wife, Mor Nitzan, was active in the left-wing women's peace group Machsom Watch. Settler activists occasionally held protest demonstrations outside his home.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

When he was promoted from commander of the Judea-Samaria Division to chief of Central Command in December 2011 by then-chief of staff Benny Gantz, it evoked howls of protest. Commentators on the Israeli right viewed it, again correctly, as something of a declaration of independence, if not downright defiance, by Gantz, who had become chief of staff the previous February.

Gantz had been a compromise appointee, chosen after the army's recommendation for chief of staff, Gadi Eizenkot, was vetoed by Netanyahu and then-defense minister Ehud Barak, and their own favorite was then disqualified over a minor real estate scandal. In appointing Alon, Gantz was laying down an early marker that he was part of the IDF consensus.

Last February Eizenkot, now 55, became chief of staff. In May he appointed Alon, 50, to be chief of operations, one of the top positions at General Staff headquarters. Alon is one of several young up-and-comers being groomed for the top spot in the next round or two. The other top name being talked about is Aviv Kochavi, 51, currently chief of Northern Command and previously chief of military intelligence — and chief of operations before that. What they all share is a reading of Israel's security situation that's at odds with the Likud consensus.

That reading starts with the knowledge, which they experience daily and share with the government, that cooperation between the IDF and the Palestinian security services under Mahmoud Abbas's command continues unabated. And that Abbas is doing his best to calm the current unrest. They know from their daily contact with their Palestinian counterparts that the steady diet of insults hurled at Abbas by Israel's political leaders — from accusations of incitement to implications of Nazism — weakens him and makes their job harder.

They know that the Palestinian security services, from the leadership on down, cooperate with Israeli security in the hope and expectation that it will lead to Palestinian independence. And that removal of that hope — as Netanyahu seemed to do when he told a Knesset committee on October 26 that Israel needs to maintain full control of the territory "for the foreseeable future" — will lead to a breakdown of cooperation and threaten Israeli security.

Nobody but the most paranoid conspiracy theorists thinks the Israeli military would ever consider disobeying the orders of Israel's democratically elected civilian government. But neither are its leaders planning to ignore the realities on the ground and pretend black is white and up is down in order to feed someone else's fantasies. And as things on the ground get more and more out of hand, they're less and less inclined to keep the facts secret.

Jonathan Jeremy "J.J." Goldberg is editor-at-large of the Forward, where he served as editor in chief for seven years (2000-2007).

Al-Monitor – November 2, 2015

How Will Jewish-Palestinian Relations Be Restored?

By Shlomi Eldar

The line was crossed during Operation Protective Edge in the summer of 2014 and resulted in the recent wave of terror attacks. The public discourse surrounding Israeli Arabs has become violent, racist and dangerous.

The rift was created despite the low degree of involvement of Palestinian

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Israelis in the recent wave of terror. Out of the 75 terror attacks perpetrated during the month of October, only two assailants were Palestinian Israelis: Alaa Raed Ahmad Ziwad, who carried out a stabbing and vehicular attack Oct. 11 in Gan Shmuel, and Mohannad Khalil Salam al-Okbi, from the Bedouin community near Hura, who on Oct. 18 carried out an attack in Beersheba. Asra Zidan Abed, from Nazareth, to whom an Oct. 9 attack in Afula was initially attributed, suffers, it seems, from a mental disorder . An investigation revealed that she was waving a knife at security forces because she wanted to commit suicide.

In light of the dozens of terror attacks in recent weeks, the Jewish public suspects, and rightly so, that everyone is a potential threat and might pull out a knife or some other sharp implement to carry out a bloody attack. "Anyone with Arab or Middle Eastern facial features is being very careful," a floor manager at a Jaffa restaurant that only employs Arabs told Al-Monitor on condition of anonymity. He pointed to a young man walking down the street wearing a T-shirt that read, "I'm an Iraqi Jew. Don't shoot me."

"That's not funny," he explained. "Jews from North African or Middle Eastern origins with those facial features put on shirts saying they are Jews so that nobody will mistake them for Arabs. There are shirts like this for Moroccan, Tunisian and Yemeni [Jews]. Look what's become of us."

Whether the T-shirt makers were trying to be funny or simply taking advantage of the escalation in the security situation to make a fast buck, these shirts would not have become such a hit if so many Israelis were not rightly concerned about being caught in the middle of a terror incident or being injured in a case of mistaken identity , which has happened on more than one occasion.

Sweepingly calling into question the loyalty of Arab Israelis is the result of ongoing, unbridled incitement by Israeli politicians. Beginning with Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's warning on election day, March 17, that "Arabs are voting in droves ," it moved on from there to right-wing Knesset members, chief among them former Foreign Minister Avigdor Liberman, who called Arab Israelis a "fifth column ," accusing them of trying to destroy the state of Israel. Not helping matters were Arab Knesset members from the Joint List, mainly from the Balad Party, who engender a hostile climate between the two communities.

When right-wing ministers and Knesset members lump together the involvement of the northern chapter of the Islamic Movement in Israel over the Temple Mount and the direct involvement of Arab Israelis in terror attacks, it means that the steps to allay concerns, mend fences and advocate reconciliation will not come from politicians.

A decline in the number of attacks has been noted in recent days, but even when things quiet down completely, it will take a long time to undo the devastating damage to the charged relations between Jews and Arabs. The only way to rebuild relations, if that is even possible, is by taking conciliatory steps.

On Nov. 1, I grabbed a taxi in Tel Aviv. The driver, boasting that since the start of the stabbing attacks, he had not taken on any Arab passengers, told me, "All Arabs are collaborators. They can't be trusted. They should leave, go away from here."

He went on, "I'm not a racist, really I'm not. Many years ago my dad had Arab workers from Gaza who used to live with us. But today that's it. It's over. No Arab will get into my cab, not one. And I'm not the only one who thinks that way. Almost every cabbie I talk to says the same thing. We have an agreement between us that we don't pull over for an Arab, regardless of whether he is a pharmacist, a doctor or a university professor. An Arab is always an Arab."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

The cab pulled up in front of a restaurant at the Tel Aviv port. Realizing that one of the waiters there was an Arab Israeli, the driver quickly covered his face. "Look he's coming over here," he said. "I used to be a regular here, but now they won't see a penny out of me." Tapping lightly on the window, the waiter said with a broad smile, "Hey Mordoch, where have you been? Come in bro, grab a bite." Rudely rejecting the offer, the driver replied, "I have no time for you [all]." The smile instantly disappeared from the waiter's face. It seems he understood what was going on. All the other restaurants in the area looked packed, except for this one, which mainly employs Arabs.

At a nearby cafe, I was approached by a waiter who recognized me as a journalist. Speaking quietly, he said, "I'm from Tira [an Israeli Arab town]." Requesting anonymity, he said that his Jewish boss supports him, but because of the current situation, he had had to change his name from the Arabic Yunis to the Israeli-Jewish-sounding Yoni. Yunis remarked, "Sometimes the waiters and the cooks call out, 'Yoni', 'Yoni,' but I don't reply. I still haven't gotten used to the fact that that's my new name." In response to being asked if his employer had urged him to change his name, Yunis smiled, but didn't say a word.

In another jam-packed restaurant, I saw a young couple. The woman, clearly pregnant, was wearing a burqa. Her husband was sitting by her side. Seated in the middle of the restaurant, they were surrounded by Jewish patrons. "You can print our names," the husband told me. "I'm Nahed, and this is my wife, Nissrin. We're from Jaffa, and we're not scared. This is our country as much as it is yours. You and we have to get used to it ." Nissrin added that in the future, she would teach the daughter she is carrying to live in peace with everyone — Jews, Muslims, Christians.

There are some long-time Israeli businesspeople who especially at this time continue to insist on hiring Arabs and even increasing their numbers in their companies. One of them, the owner of a large supermarket chain who requested anonymity, explained to Al-Monitor, "I hire Jews and Arabs together, regardless of color, religion or sex. I do it all the time. Only this way, together, will they get to know each other and realize that generalizations are a terrible thing."

That's what it's really all about. There is no silver bullet. We need to get to know each other, but mainly, as the businessman observed, "not to be afraid at all," a reference to Rabbi Breslov's saying that the main thing in life is not to be afraid.

Shlomi Eldar is a columnist for Al-Monitor's Israel Pulse. For the past two decades, he has covered the Palestinian Authority and especially the Gaza Strip for Israel's Channels 1 and 10, reporting on the emergence of Hamas. In 2007, he was awarded the Sokolov Prize, Israel's most important media award, for this work.

S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace
633 Pennsylvania Ave. NW, 5th Floor, Washington, DC 20004
www.centerpeace.org

2015 S. Daniel Abraham Center for Middle East Peace, All rights reserved.
YOU ARE RECEIVING THIS EMAIL BECAUSE YOU SIGNED UP FOR OUR NEWS UPDATES.

unsubscribe from this list update subscription preferences

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Mike Vlacich" <mvlacich@hillaryclinton.com>
To:	"Demastrie, Jesse" <Jesse.Demastrie@gmmb.com>
Date:	8/6/2015 12:45:03 AM
Subject:	Re: AFP-IK; Unintimidated PAC (Walker PAC); J Street (pro-Iran nuclear deal) placing this week

FIRST IN SCORE — AFP targets Hassan with $1.2 million ad buy:Americans for Prosperity is targeting New Hampshire Gov. Maggie Hassan with a $1.2 million television buy criticizing her handling of the state budget. The ad asks viewers to call Hassan and tell her New Hampshire needs tax cuts, not increased government spending. Hassan is in the middle of an ongoing battle with GOP legislators over the state budget after she vetoed the legislature-passed budget in the spring. The decision has also delayed her decision on a Senate run, even as outside conservative groups have spent more than $1 million attacking her on TV, digital and radio ads. The ad will run starting Monday, for four weeks, until the end of the month.

Sent from my iPhone

On Aug 5, 2015, at 6:38 PM, Demastrie, Jesse <Jesse.Demastrie@gmmb.com > wrote:

> They have not been up against other candidates yet.
>
> Sent from my iPhone
>
> On Aug 5, 2015, at 6:33 PM, Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
>
> > Have they been up at all against other potential senate candidates?
> >
> > On Aug 5, 2015, at 6:28 PM, Mike Vlacich <mvlacich@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> >
> > > I have checked in with Hassan to see what they know.
> > >
> > > Sent from my iPhone
> > >
> > > On Aug 5, 2015, at 6:26 PM, Robby Mook <re47@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:
> > >
> > > > AFP is only NH and not IA?
> > > >
> > > > On Aug 5, 2015, at 6:09 PM, Demastrie, Jesse <Jesse.Demastrie@gmmb.com > wrote:
> > > >
> > > > > No update on American for Prosperity-IK yet. Stations have not been told what "IK" means nor have spots been received yet. Spending looks to be very large over 3 weeks 8/10-8/30. WMUR alone took $800k, with total for state over $1.1 million over the 3 weeks.
> > > > >
> > > > > Unintimidated PAC (Walker PAC) has placed in Iowa to run 9/8-9/21 – a :60 – and 10/6-2/1 (30s).
> > > > >
> > > > > J Street (pro Iran nuclear deal) – new spending
> > > > > 8/5 – 8/10
> > > > > Total $432K

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

8/6
Total $4K
Washington, DC, ~5 GRPs, $4K – cable only

8/5 – 8/10
Total $428K – broadcast and cable
Portland, OR, ~165 GRPs, $32K
Philadelphia, ~190 GRPs, $83K
Detroit, ~540 GRPs, $138K
Baltimore, ~510 GRPs, $90K
Denver, ~250 GRPs, $85K

Ad: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=SDZClQADEsA

From: Demastrie, Jesse
Sent: Wednesday, August 05, 2015 3:41 PM
To: Andrew Bleeker; Brian Fallon; Christina Reynolds; David Binder; Demastrie, Jesse; Elan Kriegel; Huma Abedin; Jason Rosenbaum; Jen Palmieri; Jesse Ferguson (HRC); Jester, Daniel; Joel Benenson; John Anzalone; John Podesta; Kaye, Anson; Kristina Schake; Lenar, AJ; Mandy Grunwald; Margolis, Jim; Marlon Marshall (HRC); Matt Dover; Matt Paul; Michael Halle; Michael Vlacich; Nick Merrill; Oren Shur (HRC); Oxhorn, Liz; Pinelo, Greg; Rimel, John; Robby Mook (HRC); Teddy Goff; Tony Carrk
Subject: Americans for Prosperity-IK; Hispanic Democrats for Trump

Americans for Prosperity-IK is starting to place for 8/10-8/30 in New Hampshire (Boston, Manchester, Portland, and Burlington). We don't yet know what "IK" stands for or what the spot is but will let you know if/when we hear.

Hispanic Democrats for Trump
8/6
Total $1,340 – cable only

Ad: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=dmiwXBeO8U4
Spot applauds Trump for being such so offensive that he ends up helping Democrats.

Denver, ~10 GRPs, $1K

Jesse Demastrie Vice President, Associate Media Director
202.338.8700 | office
202.813.4983 | direct

+gmmb cause the effect

This email is intended only for the named addressee. It may contain information that is confidential/private, legally privileged, or copyright-protected, and you should handle it accordingly. If you are not the intended recipient, you do not have legal rights to retain, copy, or distribute this email or its contents, and should promptly delete the email and all electronic copies in your system; do not retain copies in any media. If you have received this email in error, please notify the sender promptly. Thank you.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Ron Klain" <ron.klain@revolution.com>
To: "Tony Carrk" <tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com>
"Jennifer Palmieri" <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com>
"Kristina Schake" <kschake@hillaryclinton.com>
"Christina Reynolds" <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com>
"Brian Fallon" <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com>
"Jake Sullivan" <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com>
"Karen Dunn" <karen.l.dunn@gmail.com>
"Robby Mook" <re47@hillaryclinton.com>
"Oren Shur" <oshur@hillaryclinton.com>
"Zachary Petkanas" <zpetkanas@hillaryclinton.com>
"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
"Sara?? Latham" <slatham@hillaryclinton.com>
"Josh Schwerin" <jschwerin@hillaryclinton.com>
"Amanda Renteria" <arenteria@hillaryclinton.com>
"Adrienne Elrod" <aelrod@hillaryclinton.com>
"Marlon Marshall" <mmarshall@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 10/30/2015 12:02:13 PM
Subject: RE: FOR REVIEW - Sanders Tar Sands

So is the hit here that, while he did sign a letter demanding an environmental review, he didn't do enough else to fight it? That seems like a weak hit

From: Tony Carrk [mailto:tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Friday, October 30, 2015 12:29 PM
To: Jennifer Palmieri; Kristina Schake; Christina Reynolds; Brian Fallon; Jake Sullivan; Ron Klain; Karen Dunn; Robby Mook; Oren Shur; Zachary Petkanas; John Podesta; Sara Latham; Josh Schwerin; Amanda Renteria; Adrienne Elrod; Marlon Marshall
Cc: Tyson Brody; Emily Aden; Samantha McClain; Sara Solow; Kristina Costa
Subject: RE: FOR REVIEW - Sanders Tar Sands

Adding Adrienne and some from political in case we decide this is worth reaching out to Shaheen.

From: Tony Carrk [mailto:tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Thursday, October 29, 2015 6:46 PM
To: Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >; Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com >; Christina Reynolds <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; 'Ron Klain' <ron.klain@revolution.com >; 'Karen Dunn' <karen.l.dunn@gmail.com >; 'Robby Mook' <re47@hillaryclinton.com >; Oren Shur <oshur@hillaryclinton.com >; Zachary Petkanas <zpetkanas@hillaryclinton.com >; 'John Podesta' <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Sara Latham <slatham@hillaryclinton.com >; Josh Schwerin <jschwerin@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Tyson Brody <tbrody@hillaryclinton.com >; Emily Aden <eaden@hillaryclinton.com >; Samantha McClain <smcclain@hillaryclinton.com >; Sara Solow <ssolow@hillaryclinton.com >; Kristina Costa <kcosta@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: FOR REVIEW - Sanders Tar Sands

Friends,

h/t to Tyson – here is more information on the tar sands hit I mentioned in my email yesterday. It is not as cut and dried since Sanders did sign a letter looking into this, but he is not outspoken on this issue at all despite Vermont environmentalists asking him to be. This may be something we want to talk to Jeanne Shaheen about since she has been more outspoken and more recently. Below is the summary and attached is the doc.

Bernie Sanders has long bragged that he opposed the Keystone Pipeline for years, calling it an "easy" decision to make. But he has been conspicuously more restrained when it comes to a pipeline between Quebec and Maine, crossing Vermont and New Hampshire.

In 2008, the oil company Enbridge filed plans to reverse the flow of the Portland to Montreal pipeline, so it could carry oil from Canada to Maine for export. This pipeline is connected to a much longer pipeline in Western Canada, the source of much tar sand oil.

In 2013, Enbridge renewed plans to reverse the flow of just the Canadian pipeline, in order to bring heavy crude from Alberta to Quebec refineries. American environmentalists became concerned this was the first step of a plan to eventually reverse the Portland to Montreal pipeline to bring tar sand oil across the border for export from Maine. 18 members of Congress, including Sanders, signed a letter to Secretary of State Kerry calling for a presidential permit and an environmental review before that could occur.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

However, Sanders has not spoken about the pipeline since then. In 2014, the Canadian government gave initial approval to reverse an Enbridge pipeline to bring tar sands oil from Alberta to Quebec. The Maine and New Hampshire Congressional delegations wrote to Secretary Kerry again in concern. But even though Vermont environmental groups called out Sanders and members of their delegations by name, it does not appear they issued a statement or criticized the Canadian decision.

In October 2015, the Canadian government gave final approval to the plan to reverse the pipeline, with no outcry from Sanders. Although Enbridge claims it has no plan to transport heavy crude across the border, his restraint on this issue compared to Keystone is notable considering the Enbridge plan could affect his home state of Vermont.

From: Tony Carrk [mailto:tcarrk@hillaryclinton.com]
Sent: Wednesday, October 28, 2015 7:59 PM
To: Jennifer Palmieri <jpalmieri@hillaryclinton.com >; Kristina Schake <kschake@hillaryclinton.com >; Christina Reynolds <creynolds@hillaryclinton.com >; Brian Fallon <bfallon@hillaryclinton.com >; Jake Sullivan <jsullivan@hillaryclinton.com >; 'Ron Klain' <ron.klain@revolution.com >; 'Karen Dunn' <karen.l.dunn@gmail.com >; 'Robby Mook' <re47@hillaryclinton.com >; Oren Shur <oshur@hillaryclinton.com >; 'Zachary Petkanas' <zpetkanas@hillaryclinton.com >; 'John Podesta' <john.podesta@gmail.com >; Sara Latham <slatham@hillaryclinton.com >
Cc: Tyson Brody <tbrody@hillaryclinton.com >; Emily Aden <eaden@hillaryclinton.com >; Samantha McClain <smcclain@hillaryclinton.com >; Sara Solow <ssolow@hillaryclinton.com >; Kristina Costa <kcosta@hillaryclinton.com >
Subject: PLS REVIEW: Sanders Hits

Hi everyone,

I wanted to us all on a single thread since this document could serve multiple purposes. Attached are some hits that could either be written or deployed during the next debate on Sanders. Note: these do not include the college and $20 trillion cost of his plans since Policy is working on them. Below is a quick summary of the hits that are in the document. It might be having a call soon to discuss if people think it's worth it.

Per HRC's request, we are doing a deeper dive on Sanders's agriculture record to see if there is anything that could be problematic to Iowa.

(As always, huge credit to the team for their help building these out.)

> Also: Tyson has been working on building out Sanders's muted response to possible tar sand oil traveling through a pipeline that goes through Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont. He found one letter he signed calling for an environmental study, something Shaheen did as well. So, while he could point to that, his outrage over potential tar sands in this pipeline is nowhere near his opposition to the Keystone Pipeline. We can send around more details once it's done, but wanted to put that on the radar.

SUMMARY

Labor/Pay to Play/Sugar - Sanders, often thought of as a champion of labor unions, accepted support from a company while it was involved in a bitter labor dispute—locking out union employees for nearly 22 months. In July 2012, he accepted $10,000 in contributions from American Crystal Sugar, while the workers had been locked out for nearly a year due to failed labor negotiations. The workers' union widely opposed the company's contract proposal because it could have doubled their out-of-pocket health care costs. At the same time American Crystal Sugar was proposing to cut back on workers' health benefits, it spent more than $2 million in lobbying money and campaign contributions to politicians like Sanders in order to preserve its favorable sugar commodity program. Sanders voted to protect the sugar program.

Crime Bill –Bernie Sanders's Presidential Campaign claimed it was researching statements made by Hillary Clinton in support of the 1994 crime bill in order to attack her in the Democratic Primary. But Sanders voted in support of the bill in 1994, and repeatedly spoke in support of it. Then Rep. Sanders criticized opposition to the bill and hoped President Clinton would be able to pass it. Furthermore, in his 2006 campaign for Senate, Sanders' campaign strongly highlighted Sanders support for the 1994 crime bill. His campaign boasted of the billions Sanders had provided to law enforcement since being elected, and used his support of the 1994 crime bill to prove Sanders was "tough on crime."

Guns - Sen. Sanders's progressive bona fides are called into question with his record on reducing gun violence. When he successfully ran for the House in 1990, he got the tacit endorsement of the NRA after pledging not to support the Brady Bill, which included waiting periods to receive weapons. Once in the House, he kept his word, voting against the legislation five times. Although he voted against the bill, he voted for an amendment that created the so-called "Charleston loophole," which allows people to purchase a weapon after three days even if their background check is incomplete. Later, Sanders, despite wanting to hold essentially every corporation accountable for something (such as fast food companies accountable for obesity), voted to protect gun manufacturers from legal liability. He also voted to strip millions from gun research, something the NRA has wanted to prevent officials from learning about gun violence. (NOTE: This doesn't include the guns from Vermont to New York)

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

LGBT (Marriage & Civil Unions) - Sen. Sanders is attacking Secretary Clinton, claiming she has been inconsistent and late to supporting marriage equality. But Sanders is rewriting history on his own record. In 2000, Sanders was reluctant to take a clear stand on civil unions and marriage equality, and did not speak out forcefully on the issue. Sanders called for an end to the divisiveness of the opposition, saying there were "a dozen other issues out there that are as important or more important as that issue." While other Vermont politicians were moving forward the cause, Sanders remained relatively quiet. Moreover, his oft-touted opposition to the Defense of Marriage Act omits Sanders's reasoning: he thought DOMA injected the federal government into a states issue.

Repealing Obamacare & Replacing it with State-Run Single Payer - Sen. Sanders has long advocated for a single payer, Medicare-for-all health plan that is administered by the states. His plan would repeal the Affordable Care Act, as well as Medicare, TRICARE, Medicaid, and SCHIP. His proposal would cost roughly $15 trillion. Vermont tried to implement a single payer plan but scrapped it because it would cost too much.

Wall Street (Commodities Futures Modernization Act) - Sen. Sanders repeatedly touts his opposition to the repeal of Glass-Steagall. What he fails to mention is that he voted for the legislation that included the Commodities Futures Modernization Act, signed into law by President Clinton. The Act exempted regulation of credit default swaps and derivatives. Sanders himself blamed the CFMA for Lehman's bankruptcy. Sanders's spokesperson said he voted for the bill because it was part of a larger bill that would have shut down the government had it not passed.

Ethanol - Sanders has voted to end ethanol subsidies. He hedged his answer on the Renewable Fuel Standard including ethanol earlier in 2015, but has subsequently come out in support.

Export-Import Bank - Sanders is a long critic of the Export-Import bank, calling it corporate welfare. However, roughly 3,000 small businesses rely on loans from the bank.

Nuclear Energy - Sanders voted for a waste removal compact that moved radioactive waste from Maine and Vermont to a dump site near a tiny community in Sierra Blanca, Texas. Sanders said the compact was "good environmental policy" and said he was "in strong support of the bill." Critics of the deal said that the site was not only environmentally unsound, but also near a small community that was low income and largely Hispanic. The compact was opposed by LULAC and the NAACP, and a local opponent to the deal called it "environmental racism."

NOTE: President Clinton signed the bill in 1997.

Immigration - Sanders's record on immigration is mixed. While he voted for the 2013 comprehensive bill, he opposed the McCain-Kennedy comprehensive bill. Sanders's objection was over guest worker program which he said drove down wages for American workers. As recent as this summer, Sanders used similar language about low-skill (and even high-skill) immigrants drive down wages for American citizens. Immigration advocates criticized him for those comments.

Sanders Not Straight on His Tax Plan - Sen. Sanders has not told the American people how much he is going to raise taxes and who is going to pay for them. When confronted on details of his tax plan, he simply says "it's coming." When he is asked what the highest rate would be, he demurs.

Sanders Not Straight on His Spending - Sen. Sanders has not told the American people how much his plans will cost and how he will pay for them. When asked for specifics, he demurs. When other estimates show trillions in new spending, he simply rejects them without offering his own estimate.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Hudson Institute" <info@hudson.org>
To:	podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date:	7/22/2015 10:30:05 AM
Subject:	News from Hudson: Sen. McCain on Foreign Policy, Iran Nuclear Deal, Cyberwarfare, Japan, and more

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Cassandra Butts" <cbutts.obama08@gmail.com>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	9/24/2008 3:27:52 AM
Subject:	Energy and EPA names

John, to follow are some of the names that have come us as we have consulted on top candidates for Energy and EPA. We'd appreciate your thoughts and additions. Needless to say, your name has come up repeatedly in our consultations. Best, Cassandra

Energy

-Frampton, George
-Gee, Robert W.: From 1997 to 2000 he served as Assistant Secretary for Policy and International Affairs and as Assistant Secretary for Fossil Energy of the U.S. Department of Energy; oversaw the operation of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, and the national research program to develop and demonstrate advanced clean coal, natural gas, and petroleum technologies.
-Jackson, Shirley Ann: Former chair of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission; current president of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute
-Holstein, Elgie
-Immelt, Jeff
-Pershing, Jonathan
-Schwarzenegger, Arnold
-Schweitzer, Brian

EPA

-Bloomberg, Michael
-Gregoire, Christine
-Grumet, Jason
-Hayes, David
-Learner, Howard: executive director of the Environmental Law and Policy Center, a Chicago-based environmental legal advocacy group that has been a key player in setting up the region's cap-and-trade program for global warming.
-Sebelius, Kathleen
-Stern, Todd

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Sarah Stephens" <sarah@democracyinamericas.org>
To: john.podesta@gmail.com
Date: 12/11/2015 10:29:04 AM
Subject: Hey, D-17. I've Got Mail!

Having trouble viewing this message? Click Here

December 12, 2015

Dear Friends:

Fifty-two years ago, as our country recovered from its near death experience in the Cuban Missile Crisis, the U.S. government cut off direct mail service to the island. Although letters could still pass from Miami to Havana, so long as they flowed through third countries, the ban on direct postal service was just a small part of the hefty regime of sanctions that became only more harsh and severe over time.

Next week in Washington - and we imagine other places as well - there will be a nice party to celebrate the diplomatic breakthrough we call D-17, and the year in which the governments of Cuba and the United States acted like adults and talked to each other respectfully.

Yes, this was long overdue and yes, civil behavior was about the least that a citizen of either country could have asked of his government. But, when you think about what came before December 17, 2014, and what happened after, this year stands out like a Chanukah candle, a shining beacon of light.

For five decades, everything about our policy toward Cuba was about getting the Castro family to cry uncle. We tried to kill them and, when that failed, we sought to incite an insurrection among Cubans who we tried to make hungry and more desperate hurting them with our sanctions.

We didn't just cut off their mail. We cut off direct phone service. We divided Cuban families by imposing stringent travel sanctions; just a decade ago, bereaved families couldn't even make the trip to say goodbye to a lost loved one.

No petty slights were held back. We denied visas to Ibrahim Ferrer of the Buena Vista Social Club, guitarist Manuel Galvan and other musicians to keep them from coming to our country to pick up their Grammy Awards, calling them "detrimental to the interests of the United States."

We heaped disdain on the Cuban doctors who the Castros offered us to treat the ill and injured after Hurricane Katrina. Such disdain, our old policy never considered the notion that Cubans might want to be left alone to write a new future for themselves.

We did all of this and more, year after year, and the system we wanted to replace so badly never budged.

Now, we have a new policy. It isn't perfect. It's pentimento - most of the new paint boldly covers over what we used to do though, from time to time, we can still see trace evidence of the old policy (#Radio/TVMartí , #CMPP, etc.). This new policy is a lot better than what it was, and certainly doesn't come with the sense of shame we feel about a political discourse that even considers putting the religious backgrounds on the visa papers of desperate migrants.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

This policy is about opening real communication - not just direct mail service, but also direct calls, cellphone roaming in Cuba, more trade and travel and more access to the Internet for Cubans because our agreement with President Castro included support for Wi-Fi hotspots.

It's also about open embassies, and real diplomacy. This week, U.S. and Cuban negotiators started addressing the billions of outstanding compensation claims for expropriated property and damage from the embargo.

One expert told the Washington Post , "it was a positive sign that the sides were even talking about the issue. It's the first time the two countries are going back to look at this history and try to sort out a system for fixing it.' 'You don't have this conversation if you haven't built some mutual trust and respect,' he said."

We're told there are more agreements on the way on bigger ticket items, like the restoration of normal airline service between our countries, and more talks to take place on law enforcement, fugitives from justice in both countries, and human rights.

It's also about sticking to our beliefs. To their credit, our diplomats never let their knees buckle when pro-sanctions hardliners in Miami manufactured the lie that Cuban troops were driving Russian tanks in Syria, and they certainly haven't called to close the border despite the upsurge in Cuban migration through Central America. To its credit, our State Department stood up straight on International Human Rights Day to highlight our disagreements with Cuba on free expression and to criticize the arrests of Cubans who sought to express themselves on that day.

Can anyone think of an alternative? Not even the geniuses at the Washington Post , who stubbornly insist that President Obama is being played by Raúl Castro, have offered one suggestion that could have brought us this far. All of this can be taken away, of course, by next year's election. That's a risk that should focus both governments on obtaining more results. There's a lot more work, hard work, left to do.

It's a stretch to think the U.S. and Cuba will emerge from this normalization process as allies. We were adversaries and now, after a year of living under a policy of engagement, the U.S. and Cuba have built enough respect and trust to become governments the other can work with. What a great change and sign of hope for the future.

The last year has been better, magically better than the previous, and quite painful, 55. That alone is something worth celebrating. So, on Thursday night, raise a glass, have a mojito, hug a friend.

Oh, and when that letter from Havana gets delivered, don't forget to thank December 17.

This week in Cuba news...

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

U.S- Cuba
- Bi-Lateral Talks:U.S. and Cuba Hold Talks on Settling Claims For Seized Assets and Embargo Damages
- Moody's shifts outlook on Cuba from stable to positive
- Up at Bat: MLB Heads to Cuba for good will tour
- Breaking news: U.S. to begin direct mail service with Cuba

In Cuba
- Cuba is near closing a deal with the Paris Group that would restructure $16 billion in debt.
- Cuba hands over first U.S. fugitive since U.S. and Cuba reestablished diplomatic relations

Cuba Foreign Relations
- Update on Cuban Migrant Crisis, President of Costa Rica to visit Cuba

Recommended Viewing:
- ¡OUT! Las Transformistas of Havana , Eric Politzer
- Hemingway's Life in Cuba Profiled in Biopic- Debuts at Havana Film Festival , Cuba Journal.

Recommended Reading:
- Reconciling U.S. Property Claims in Cuba: Transforming Trauma into Opportunity , Latin America Initiative at Brooking, Richard Feinberg
- Uncovering a Long-Lost Aston Martin While Riding Around Cuba in Castro's Limos, Road & Track, Jonathan Ward
- Why Cuba is ripe for investment , CNN Money, Ramphis Castro

U.S-Cuba:

Bi-Lateral Talks: U.S. and Cuba Hold Talks on Settling Claims For Seized Assets and Embargo Damages

On Tuesday, U.S. and Cuban negotiators met in Havana to discuss, as Reuters reported, "the claims of Americans whose property was nationalized after the 1959 revolution and Cuban counterclaims for damages caused by the U.S. trade embargo."

After a day of negotiations, the Miami Herald noted, the talks concluded with an agreement to talk again next year. The Herald quotes a State Department official who said the meeting produced, "A very respectful and professional exchange," and a communique from Cuba's Foreign Ministry which said the discussions took place in "A respectful and professional climate."

After Cuba's revolution in 1959, the Cuban government nationalized properties belonging both to Cubans and foreign investors, including those from the United States. Under U.S. law, 5,913 individual claims have been certified accounting for losses with an assessed value of $1.9 billion when they were seized, but are now worth roughly $8 billion, according to the Washington Post . Ongoing claims negotiations are likely to include legal judgements against Cuba in U.S. courts, including the 1996 Brothers to the Rescue incident, and unspecified direct claims by the U.S. government against Cuba's government, according to the Miami Herald.

Cuba asserts that it is owed roughly $122 billion in damages for the economic embargo and an additional $181 billion in compensation for the Bay of Pigs and other attacks on Cuba launched by or with the support of U.S. administrations and Cuban exiles.

Mauricio J. Tamargo, the former chairman of the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission at the Justice Department calls these negotiations "an enormously big deal" highlighting the fact that, "The Cubans have up till now never recognized these claims as legitimate or something they are even prepared to discuss. It has never happened in 56 years since the revolution began and they started confiscating American property."

Among the claimants from the U.S., the Cuban Electric Company, whose current shares belong to Office Depot, has the largest claim. The 50 largest American claimants account for three quarters of total claims, with the majority of large claims coming from corporations not individuals. For a list of the top twenty U.S. claims, please click here .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Although a payment plan will have to be part of a final agreement, Cuba's ability to pay, according to one expert, should not be an obstacle. In a report published by the Brookings Institution , Professor Richard Feinberg offers a formula nested in a grander diplomatic bargain. This would allow Cuba to spread payments over ten years, with Cuba able to offer U.S companies investment vouchers or tax incentives, and the U.S. allowing Cuba to join the World Bank and other financial institutions.

Under the Helms-Burton law, resolving this complicated issue is a precondition for normalizing relations. As Peter Kornbluh and William LeoGrande write in "Back Channel to Cuba: The hidden History of Negotiations between Washington and Havana," their history of U.S.-Cuba diplomacy, since the property nationalizations after the revolution caused the U.S. to impose the embargo, the compensation issue must be solved before it is lifted. In addition, just as avoiding default on a nation's sovereign debt can protect its ongoing financial stability, the protection of property rights in Cuba would be affirmed by settling the claims, and contribute to Cuba's ability to address its economic problems going forward by attracting new foreign investment and the like.

Individual claims are only being negotiated for individuals who were U.S. citizens at the time their property was confiscated. Relatedly, the family of the deceased mobster, Meyer Lansky, whose hotel casino, The Havana Riviera, was seized by the Cuban government, wants the hotel back or cash compensation for the loss. However, since the claim has not been certified by The U.S. Foreign Claims Settlement Commission, Lansky's heirs may have missed the boat.

Cuba hands over first U.S. fugitive since U.S. and Cuba reestablished diplomatic relations

Cuba returned a fugitive wanted by the United States this week, AFP reports . Cuban authorities detained Shawn Wegmann, who was wanted on firearms charges in the U.S., on Oct. 31 after he took off a GPS ankle monitor and fled to Cuba by a stolen boat, according to The Miami Herald . The Cuban authorities notified the U.S. Marshals Service in early November and a team of federal marshals flew to Havana to pick him up on Tuesday.

"Weggman is the first fugitive who has been returned to the United States by the Cuban government after fleeing to Cuba since diplomatic relations began," said U.S. Marshal Amos Rojas Jr.

Back in November, U.S. and Cuban diplomats held a law enforcement dialogue, where they reportedly discussed counter-terrorism, counter-narcotics, transnational crime, cyber-crime, secure travel and trade, and fugitives. As we reported , both parties agreed to continue technical discussions in 2016. The U.S. seeks the extradition of around 70 fugitives, including Assata Shakur and William Morales. Cuba's government also seeks the return of several figures accused of engaging in acts of terrorism against Cubans.

Up at Bat: MLB Heads to Cuba for good will tour

Major League Baseball and its players union are set for a good-will tour to Cuba next week, reports the New York Times . The league is set to host children clinics and a charity event led by top MLB officials and players including Joe Torre, the former manager of the New York Yankees and the chief baseball officer of the MLB, LA Dodger's ace Clayton Kershaw, Miguel Cabrera of the Detroit Tigers, Nelson Cruz of the Seattle Mariners, and Jon Jay, centerfielder for the San Diego Padres.

The trip carries a particular significance for the three Cuban players who will also participate on the trip; White Sox star Jose Abreu, veteran shortstop Alexei Ramirez, and Brayan Pena of the St. Louis Cardinals All three players left the island in order to play in the major leagues here in the U.S.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Normally, the government of Cuba prohibits defectors from reentering the island. For the trip, the Cuban players have received assurances from the government of Cuba that they will be able to enter and exit the island safely as well as have the opportunity to visit family.

The trip is the latest step by the MLB to improve its relationship with Cuba. Baseball's top lawyer, Dan Halem met with Antonio Castro, senior Cuban baseball official and the son of Fidel Castro, last October in order to discuss strengthening the league's relationship with the island.

Foremost, the league has expressed interest in creating a system in which the Cuban players can legally and safely be scouted by MLB teams and enter the league. Moving forward, there have been talks of spring training games in Havana and even a Cuban minor league team.

Breaking news: U.S. to begin direct mail service with Cuba

It was announced today that U.S. and Cuban officials have reached a deal to resume direct mail services for the first time since 1966.

A pilot program is set to be launched as technical and operational specifics continue to be discussed. A start date has not been announced for the permanent reestablishment of direct mail services.
The announcement comes just days before the anniversary of the Obama Administration's normalization began.

In Cuba

Moody's shifts outlook on Cuba from "stable" to positive

On Thursday, Moody's Investors Service affirmed Cuba's Caa2 foreign currency issuer rating while improving its outlook on Cuba's economy from stable to positive. Moody's is a leading provider of credit ratings, research, and risk analysis.

As the Financial Times rported, Cuba has been attracting greater interest among international investors in the year since the U.S. and Cuba had the breakthrough in diplomatic relations. Moody's credits the rapprochement with improvements in Cuba's economic outlook - increases in tourism, for example.

Moody's also observed that, despite the decline in oil prices, Cuba is surviving reductions in financial flows from its relationship with Venezuela. The agency said a pick-up in economic activity on the island, aided by measures Cuba has taken to diversify its portfolio of economic relationships, has offset the drag on growth created by Venezuela's problems.

Cuba is near closing a deal with the Paris Group that would restructure $16 billion in debt.

Cuba is likely to strike a debt forgiveness deal with the Paris Group this week, reports Reuters. Parties are expected to meet in Paris later this week to finalize a multilateral deal.

The Paris Club is an informal organization of creditor nations that includes "Australia, Austria, Belgium, Britain, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Ireland, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Russia, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and the United States."

According to a diplomate from a major creditor nation, "Cuba has agreed to pay the principal of around $5 billion owed since its 1986 default in exchange for forgiving $11 billion in service charges, interest and penalties... Negotiations are now more about how much time they need to pay it and how much of the money will be reinvested in Cuba."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Since Raúl Castro became president in 2008, he has made the country's finances a top priority resulting in a trade and current account surplus that has been sustained since 2011. Now, as normalization with the United States continues, creditors are increasingly flexible with Cuba.

One European diplomat was quoted in Reuters saying, "Our companies want this out of the way so they can obtain financing for investments... They want to get here before the Americans lift the embargo."

Cuba's foreign debt is estimated at debt $26 billion. The country is not part of the World Bank or another international lending organization which makes its foreign investment and financing difficult. The deal with the Paris Group could help to improve the situation, as Richard Feinberg of the Brookings Institute notes,

A comprehensive deal would go a long way toward normalizing Cuba's international financial relations and gaining access to official trade credits... However, a deal with the Paris Club will not get Cuba a good international credit rating. That can only come from more robust export earnings and a healthier sustainable balance of payments.

Cuba Foreign Relations

Update on Cuban Migrant Crisis, President of Costa Rica to visit Cuba

Immigration from Cuba to the United States has sky rocketed over since the announcement to normalize relations last year. The Washington Post reports the number "rising to 43,159 from 24,278 the previous year."

The influx is different from past immigration, not just in size but also in the methods used. The vast majority are coming through land, using Central American nations and U.S. ports of entry along the Mexican border.

The surge in migration is reportedly being driven, in part, by fears among Cubans that preferential treatment that Cuban migrants receive under current U.S. policy could be taken away.

As Cubans try to take advantage of existing laws, a migrant crisis has developed in the Central American nations being used for passage. According to the Washington Post, "As many as 4,000 U.S.-bound Cubans have become stranded in Costa Rica since last month, when Nicaragua stopped letting them pass through."

Ecuador has also taken measures to enforce its borders and slow the stream of Cuban immigrants attempting to pass through. For the first time since 2008, the country reinstated strict visa requirements sparking protests in Havana.

The past Wednesday, the President of Costa Rica issued a statement regarding the migrant crisis. He called on citizens and immigrants alike to be patient and to work with the government peacefully. He also called on the governments of Panama and other nations to also ease this process. The President of Costa Rica is scheduled to make a trip to Cuba next week to further bilateral talks on this issue.

Recommended Viewing:

¡OUT! Las Transformistas of Havana , Eric Politzer
This week, CDA was fortunate to receive a copy of Eric Politzer's beautiful new photography book.,¡OUT!. Inside its bright pink cover, ¡OUT! features beautiful, captivating, photos of performers in Havana's gay cabarets. The book celebrates the "individual, creativity, [and] sense of confidence" possessed by the individuals highlighted.

Hemingway's Life in Cuba Profiled in Biopic- Debuts at Havana Film Festival , Cuba Journal.
The film "Papa" is set to premiere this week at Cuba's 37th International Festival of New

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Latin Cinema. The film tells the story of journalist Ed Meyers who travels to Cuba to meet his idol, Ernest Hemingway. Their story unfolds amidst the backdrop of the Cuban Revolution.

Recommended Reading:

Reconciling U.S. Property Claims in Cuba: Transforming Trauma into Opportunity , Latin America Initiative at Brooking, Richard Feinberg
In depth article detailing how property claims between the U.S. and Cuba will be addressed. Richard Feinberg provides a detailed account the history behind these property disputes and cites past examples in order to represent what the final outcome could be.

Uncovering a Long-Lost Aston Martin While Riding Around Cuba in Castro's Limos , Road & Track, Jonathan Ward
Avid collector and restorer of vintage vehicles, Jonathan Ward, describes his summer exploring Cuba's car culture.

Why Cuba is ripe for investment , CNN Money, Ramphis Castro
Kauffman Fellow and technology startup founder, Ramphis Castro, describes the potential in Cuba as a huge opportunity for venture capitalists after attending Cuba's first-ever Startup Weekend. "Early-stage venture capitalists want to see two things: the pool of talent and the need for a given solution. Cuba has both in spades," Ramphis describes.

Until next time,

The Cuba Central Team

DONATE NOW THROUGH Network for Good

Like our work? Consider a monthly donation!

The Cuba Central Newsblast is produced by the Center for Democracy in the Americas (CDA). CDA is devoted to changing U.S. policy toward Cuba and the other countries of the Americas by basing our relations on mutual respect, fostering dialogue with those governments and movements with which U.S. policy is at odds, and recognizing positive trends in democracy and governance. For more information, check out the CDA website. You can also like us on Facebook or follow us on Twitter .

© 2015 Center for Democracy in the Americas. All rights reserved.

CUBACENTRAL Center for Democracy IN THE AMERICAS

Forward email

SafeUnsubscribe

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com by sarah@democracyinamericas.org | Update Profile/Email Address | Rapid removal with SafeUnsubscribe ™ | About our service provider.

Trusted Email from Constant Contact FREE Try it FREE today.

Center for Democracy in the Americas | PO Box 53106 NW | Washington | DC | 20009

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Margolis, Jim" <Jim.Margolis@gmmb.com>
To: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date: 3/10/2015 8:01:27 AM
Subject: FW: Iran

From: Kristina Schake <kristinakschake@gmail.com >
Date: Tuesday, March 10, 2015 at 9:39 AM
To: Joel Benenson <jbenenson@bsgco.com >, GMMB GMMB <jim.margolis@gmmb.com >, Mandy Grunwald <gruncom@aol.com >, Jen Palmieri <jennifer.m.palmieri@gmail.com >, Josh Schwerin <joshschwerin@gmail.com >, Cheryl Mills <cheryl.mills@gmail.com >, Robert Mook <robbymook2015@gmail.com >, John Podesta <john.podesta@gmail.com >
Subject: Iran

Language from Jake:

Let me say a word on Iran. As Secretary of State, I worked with Congress on a bipartisan basis to construct the most effective sanctions regime in history. Those sanctions, along with patient and determined diplomacy, brought Iran to the negotiating table. Now the President and his team are in the midst of intense negotiations. Their goal is a diplomatic solution that would close off all of Iran's pathways to a nuclear bomb and give us unprecedented access and insight into Iran's nuclear program. Reasonable people can disagree about what exactly it will take to accomplish this objective, and we all must judge any final agreement on its merits. But right now, there is an urgent need to restore a bipartisan commitment to the patriotic idea that politics stops at the water's edge. The recent letter from Republican senators was out of step with the best traditions of American leadership. One has to ask: what was the purpose of this letter? There appear to be two logical answers -- either these Senators were trying to be helpful to the Iranians, or hurtful to the commander-in-chief in the midst of high-stakes international diplomacy. Either answer does discredit to the letter's signatories. We can all agree that a diplomatic solution that prevents Iran from acquiring a nuclear weapon is the right objective. Let's give the president the space and support he needs to achieve it. Let's choose statesmanship over politics.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Berning, Nick" <NBerning@foe.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 6/9/2008 5:15:39 AM
Subject: [big campaign] McCain contradicts own position on nuclear power http://action.foe.org/t/4027/pressRelease.jsp?press_release_KEY=380

For Immediate Release:
June 9, 2008

For more information contact:
Nick Berning, 202-222-0748

McCain Contradicts Own Position on Nuclear Power

Says he opposes energy subsidies—but then supports massive handouts for nuclear power

WASHINGTON, D.C.—Friends of the Earth Action President Brent Blackwelder criticized Sen. John McCain today for once again contradicting his own position on taxpayer giveaways to the nuclear power industry.

McCain has repeatedly supported billions of dollars of handouts for the nuclear power industry, most recently by advocating the addition of massive nuclear giveaways to the Lieberman-Warner global warming bill.

But today's Wall Street Journal reports that at a conference in Washington State last month, McCain said he opposes government support for clean energy. McCain reportedly said, "I'm a little wary -- I have to give you straight talk -- about government subsidies. … When government jumps in and distorts the market, then there's unintended consequences as well as intended."

Friends of the Earth Action President Brent Blackwelder responded by calling McCain's comments hypocritical.

"Instead of giving us straight talk, John McCain is talking out of both sides of his mouth," Blackwelder said. "He claims to be worried about 'distorting' the market, but there is no market at all for new nuclear power in this country without massive government subsidies. McCain's explanation for rejecting clean energy such as wind and solar doesn't wash. It's hypocrisy, plain and simple."

"Voters need to understand there's a world of difference between Barack Obama and John McCain on clean energy," Blackwelder said. "Barack Obama will hasten the transition to clean energy. John McCain won't."

###

Friends of the Earth Action (www.foeaction.org) provides extra muscle to our sister organization, Friends of the Earth, in legislative battles affecting our environment. FoE Action and our affiliated PAC also serve as Friends of the Earth's political arm, making thoughtful political endorsements, providing direct support to candidates, and placing environmentalists in the field on critical campaigns. Friends of the Earth Action's mission is to promote a clean, healthy and just world and to ensure that we have lawmakers who will work to protect the environment.

--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Jacob Roberts" <jacob@progressiveaccountability.org>
To: bigcampaign@googlegroups.com
Date: 7/3/2008 3:00:28 PM
Subject: [big campaign] Media Monitoring Report - Evening 07/03/08

Main Topics: Campaign shakeup, free trade, flip-flops

Summary of Shift: New evacuation orders in California, including in Big Sur. Oil refinery fire east of Los Angeles. Obama made a speech on Iraq in which he avowed that McCain would have to explain his plans to continue the operation in Iraq. Colombia hostage story continues. A singer's substitution of 'black anthem' for national anthem infuriates the likes of Tom Tancredo. The US's destabilizing position in Afghanistan received a sizable chunk of media coverage. More passport file snooping reports surface, this time involving celebrities. Huge job losses provoked many reports on how to save oneself economically from nationwide financial hardships. Perino announces that Bush will attend the opening ceremonies of the Chinese Olympics. Judge orders that YouTube must hand over viewing history to Viacom. CNN airs report that unqualified diplomats line top ambassadorial positions in the US and the recent salmonella outbreak could have originated in Mexico.

Highlights
1) NBC: McCain defends his trip to foreign soil and answers to campaign shakeup
2) CNN: Dana Bash looks closely at the McCain campaign shakeup [this clip and variations of it ran several times tonight]
3) MSNBC: GOP analyst criticizes McCain's strong pro-free trade stance
4) FNC: McCain flip-flops on whether to talk politics on foreign soil [this story ran several times on FNC tonight]
5) CNN: Poll finds that voters don't mind a little flip-flopping from their candidate [this poll was a recurrent subject tonight]
6) CNN: Correspondent claims Uribe did McCain 'a big favor' by briefing McCain on hostage situation before his arrival during panel discussion on whether McCain's arrival in Colombia around the same time the hostage release happened was coincidental. Panel concludes: yes. [no clip]
7) CNN: European Union negotiators offer Iran a break from sanctions if Iran takes a break from parts of its nuclear activity. The offer comes amidst the hope that the world can avoid an Israeli strike on Iran. Iran met the offer with favorable words and vows to consider it. [no clip]
8) CNN: Feature on McCain's and Obama's flip-flops with the conclusion that 'flip-flopping' is a relatively insignificant issue [no clip]
9) CNN: Paul Begala declares, 'McCain's foreign policy expertise could easily become an economic liability' [no clip]
10) FNC: Ann Coulter says that McCain does more good for his campaign out of the country than in it; announces that she has bought 'getdrunkandvoteformccain.com .' [no clip]

Clips
Highlight #1
McCain Defends Trip to Colombia, Campaign Staff Shake-Up
LESTER HOLT: Meanwhile John McCain responded to [Obama's statements on Iraq] while on his way back to Phoenix . . .

KELLY O'DONNELL: . . . I've been in touch with senior advisers to John McCain and their response is stinging. They allege that Obama has reversed the central promise of his candidacy . . . and in an odd choice of words, they are actually congratulating Barack Obama for moving towards what they say is John McCain's position . . . today in Mexico City, John and Cindy McCain received a blessing at the country's most holy site for Roman Catholics . . . during his two day swing, McCain managed to meet with the presidents of Colombia and Mexico, campaign events even some Republicans found puzzling . . .

JOHN MCCAIN: It's also appropriate for me to keep up to speed on the issues and challenges we face in our hemisphere . . .

O'DONNELL: His campaign operation is trying to get up to speed. McCain ordered a shift in duties back at headquarters that could quiet grumblings about a lack of message and strategic errors. [to McCain] Do you believe you were headed toward defeat?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

MCCAIN: The changes are big. The changes are a better division of some of the responsibilities as our campaign has grown.

Highlight #2
Dana Bash Analyzes McCain's Campaign Changes and the Source of the Troubles that Spurred It (CNN 07/03/08 4:19pm)
[Opens with summary]
DANA BASH: When there's a high-profile shakeup like they announced yesterday, expectations really skyrocket that there's gonna be a turnaround fast, especially in this case where concern was really high among republicans about the state of the McCain campaign, but I talked to several republican allies of McCain today who told me they worry a source of the problem is actually the candidate himself who likes to do things his way.

Okay so there's a new guy at the helm of the McCain operation. What's going to change? First, McCain aides promise a makeover; not his outfits—his events.

MCCAIN: This is indeed a change election.

BASH: Chastened by the optics of McCain's now infamous green screen speech last month, former television producer and Bush veteran, Greg Jenkins is on-board for a visual revamp. For example, when McCain kicks off a jobs tour next week and talks economics in battlegrounds like Ohio, we're told he'll appear with families. Sounds like campaign 101, but, until now, there was a lot of McCain and a teleprompter.

CNN is also told there will now be what a senior aide calls better 'synchronicity' between the message McCain is delivering and where he delivers it. That, after blowback for going to Houston, oil country to say this:

MCCAIN: I'm a believer in the technologies that one day will free us from oil entirely.

BASH: Some changes are up and running. Straight Talk airways took flight this week. Inside, a TV friendly cabin for the candidate who revels in reporter freewheeling. McCain used to appear airborne in unflattering light that made supporters cringe.

Still several associates tell CNN they worry McCain's straight talk sessions, which he won't give up, knock him off-message. Like the time he stepped on a major speech by telling reporters about his running mate list.

[…]

SARA TAYLOR: One of his strengths is that, you know, people view him as a true true independent. That has impacts in a campaign. It's a challenge many candidates face. They'd like to run their own campaign.

BASH: Now another change that you won't really see, but is absolutely essential to any campaign is in the McCain political operation. Part of what republicans in and out of the McCain world tell us that they were concerned about is that the campaign wasn't really organized to keep track of the ground operations in battleground states […] and that is something, as you know, that is really critical because it is data that is crucial to measuring progress […]. Something I'm told, by a senior adviser, that they're gonna change.

Highlight #3
Republican Strategist Tony Blankley: "It's Going to Sound Like McBush to Some Extent" (MSNBC 07/03/08 6:17)
JOE SCARBOROUGH: Tony, as a former Republican strategist, what in world do you say to John McCain when the news keeps getting worse on the economy, you've had a president in the White House for just about seven years who's gotten everything that he's wanted, you have Republicans running congress for most of the part and a Republican recession is staring America in the face, how does McCain get around that?

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

TONY BLANKLEY: Well to start out with, he shouldn't be campaigning in Colombia and Mexico, he should be campaigning in Akron, Ohio . . . he's got to at least fake empathy. He's not a guy who shows empathy real well, I think Obama will win that . . . on the other hand I don't think Obama's policies are going to stand up to reason. Now reason may not win the day. I concede that McCain has a problem since both he and Bush are generally in favor of free market principles and lower taxes . . . it's going to sound like M-M-McBush to some extent . . .

Highlight #4
In Opposition to Earlier Statements, McCain Does Talk Politics on Foreign Soil (FNC 07/03/08 7:38pm)
TRACE GALLAGHER: John McCain sitting down with Fox News south of the border, he's talking trade an immigration and calling on Mexico to do its part to keep illegal immigrants out of the US. Listen.

JOHN MCCAIN: We obviously expect them to do more. And that is something I think, I think that this president is truly dedicated to addressing some of these issues. Maybe not always in agreement but I think he's committed to it.

GALLAGHER: McCain met with Mexico's president today and got in a little sight seeing as well . . .

CARL CAMERON: . . . well John McCain did have a meeting with Mexico's president . . . he also toured the Basilica de Guadelupe, South America's most famous religious site . . .and he had a surprise guest there – Jeb Bush . . . who just happened to be in Mexico decided to join him for that tour and although it may kick off some vice presidential speculation, Jeb Bush has long said that he does not want to return to public life. Sen. McCain just yesterday said he didn't want to talk about politics or criticize Barack Obama on foreign soil but when we sat down with him today, he gave one of his toughest attacks on Obama's credibility yet. . .

[. . .]

CAMERON: Do you trust him?

MCCAIN: Uhh, I think, uh, I don't trust him on campaign financing . . .

Highlight #5
Voters Agree: John McCain Changed Platform for Political Reasons (CNN 07/03/08 7:06pm)
LISA SYLVESTER: Now a majority of voters believe Senators McCain and Obama have changed their political positions to win votes; quite a contrast to the image the candidates are trying to present. McCain calls himself 'a straight-talker' and Obama says he's all about changing current policies. […]

BILL SCHNEIDER: Welcome to the flip-flop primary. John McCain accuses Barack Obama of flip-flopping on campaign finance and gun rights and town halls. Obama accuses McCain of flip-flopping on immigration and offshore oil drilling and taxes. Have voters noticed?

Yes. 61% believe that McCain has changed his positions for political reasons, but nearly as many believe Obama has done the same thing. A pair of flip-floppers! Shock? Horror? Maybe not.

In 2004 when George W. Bush called John Kerry 'a flip-flopper,' the charge stuck. […] Now voters may welcome some flexibility in their leaders. They seem to want a leader who can bring the country together.

Senator McCain:

JOHN MCCAIN: And I will, as I often have in the past, work with anyone of either party to get things done for our country.

[…]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

SCHNEIDER: Do voters believe either candidate can end the partisan gridlock in Washington? No. By more than two to one, voters do not believe McCain can end the partisan gridlock, despite his reputation as a maverick.

[…] Cynicism or bitter experience? After all, both Bill Clinton and George W. Bush started out promising to be uniters not dividers and look where we are.

--
Jacob Roberts
PAO
208.420.3470 (c)
--~--~---------~--~----~------------~-------~--~----~
You received this message because you are subscribed to the "big campaign" group.

To post to this group, send to bigcampaign@googlegroups.com

To unsubscribe, send email to bigcampaign-unsubscribe@googlegroups.com

E-mail ryan@campaigntodefendamerica.org with questions or concerns

This is a list of individuals. It is not affiliated with any group or organization.
-~----------~----~----~----~------~----~------~--~---

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Burns Strider" <burns.strider@americanbridge.org>
To: CTRFriendsFamily <CTRFriendsFamily@americanbridge.org>
Date: 12/4/2014 8:34:27 AM
Subject: Correct The Record Thursday December 4, 2014 Afternoon Roundup

Correct The Record Thursday December 4, 2014 Afternoon Roundup:

Tweets:

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton 's approach to 2016 is "thoughtful, critical & with the best interest of our country in her heart." http://www.rollcall.com/news/attacking_hillarys_strengths_lame_duck_gop_oughta_take_a_holiday_break-238400-1.html … [12/4/14, 12:32 p.m. EST]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton worked to increase the minimum wage #HRC365 http://correctrecord.org/memo-lame-duck-period-brings-lame-attacks/ … [12/3/14, 6:07 p.m. EST]

Correct The Record @CorrectRecord: .@HillaryClinton pushed agencies "to think differently about the role of women in conflicts and peacemaking" http://correctrecord.org/hillary-clinton-keeping-the-peace/ … [12/3/14, 5:46 p.m. EST]

Headlines:

Boston Globe: "Hillary Clinton to speak at Boston conference"

"Thursday's conference is being held at the Boston Convention and Exhibition Center in South Boston. It is sold out and more than 10,000 people are registered to attend, according to the confab's website."

Time: "Hillary Clinton Backers Release Country Music Video"

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"A new, three-and-a-half minute country music video featuring cute cowboys in tight shirts, dusty tractors and Ken Burns-style shots of a young Hillary Clinton cooing over baby Chelsea was released on YouTube this morning."

National Journal: "The Annotated Lyrics of That Incredible Hillary 2016 Song"

"A super PAC supporting Hillary Clinton, called Stand With Hillary, has created a song that is sure to surpass Taylor Swift on the Billboard Top 100."

Washington Examiner column: Michael Barone: "Clinton's stock declining in futures market"

"Voters expect presidential candidates to look to the future. Hillary Clinton has wide leads in polls for the Democratic nomination. But her record is a bad fit for the Democratic primary electorate in which the energy currently comes from the left."

Real Clear Politics: "Jeb Bush Putting Out Feelers in New Hampshire"

"Two top New Hampshire Republican strategists have been contacted this week by a Jeb Bush confidant to discuss their interest in leading the former Florida governor's prospective presidential campaign there, RealClearPolitics has learned from GOP sources in the Granite State."

Yahoo: "Obama's attorney general pick wants to throw the book at convicted Hillary Clinton bundler"

"The U.S. attorney nominated by President Barack Obama to be his next attorney general is asking a federal judge to impose a stiff prison term of up to four and a half years on a former Hillary Clinton fundraiser convicted of making more than $180,000 in illegal campaign contributions."

Articles:

Boston Globe: "Hillary Clinton to speak at Boston conference"

By Joshua Miller

December 4, 2014

Hillary Rodham Clinton is scheduled to give a keynote address at a Boston conference Thursday afternoon.

The might-be 2016 White House hopeful is set to speak at the Massachusetts Conference for Women, an annual one-day confab with workshops, seminars and speeches on "the issues that matter most to women."

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Clinton, a former secretary of state, US senator and first lady, has said she will probably decide on a second White House bid after 2015 begins.

If she jumps in, Clinton will begin her campaign as the frontrunner for the Democratic nomination for president. She lost her 2008 primary run to Barack Obama, who later picked her as his first secretary of state.

Although the 2016 election is just under two years away, positioning for the race is already heating up.

Thursday's conference is being held at the Boston Convention and Exhibition Center in South Boston. It is sold out and more than 10,000 people are registered to attend, according to the confab's website.

Clinton's remarks are set to be livestreamed online beginning at 2 p.m.

The media affairs director for the conference did not respond to emailed questions about whether and how much Clinton is being paid for her appearance.

The Boston Globe is among the media sponsors of the conference.

Time: "Hillary Clinton Backers Release Country Music Video"

By Haley Sweetland Edwards

December 4, 2014, 12:20 p.m. EST

[Subtitle:] "She's a mother, a daughter, and through it all she's a loving wife."

A new, three-and-a-half minute country music video featuring cute cowboys in tight shirts, dusty tractors and Ken Burns-style shots of a young Hillary Clinton cooing over baby Chelsea was released on YouTube this morning.

While the video received mixed reviews at TIMEs D.C. office — a random sample of reactions included phrases like "croon-tastic," "cute!" "cute?" and "oh, dear" — its mere existence underscores the reality that Hillary Clinton's as-yet-unannounced campaign is going to happen whether or not she gets out in front of it.

The group behind the new country video is called Stand With Hillary, or SWH. It was formed in Southern California this fall by Miguel Orozco, Daniel Chavez and his daughter, Christina Chavez, "to create positive, social media stories" designed to "reach out to working class and Latino voters."

Here are some of the lyrics the video features to do just that: "Thinking about one great lady, like the women in my life. She's a mother, a daughter, and through it all she's a loving wife. Oh, there's something about her, this great lady, caring, hard-working, once a First Lady, she fights for country and the family and now it's time for us to stand up with Hillary."

Orozco and the Chavezes self-funded this video and the website, but in the future will be looking for small donations from supporters, Chavez told TIME this morning.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Chavez, who worked as a deputy director in the Department of Labor under Bill Clinton, said part of the motivation for starting SWH came from his wife and daughter, who were “deeply inspired by the Clinton family.” In the '90s, a young Christina Chavez, who is now 32, had the opportunity to meet young Chelsea and Socks, the Clintons’ famous cat, during “take your daughter to work day,” Chavez explained. “She’s had a lifelong love of the Clintons ever since.”

National Journal: “The Annotated Lyrics of That Incredible Hillary 2016 Song”

By Emma Roller

December 4, 2014

[Subtitle:] Super-PAC ad or Ford truck commercial? You decide.

A super PAC supporting Hillary Clinton, called Stand With Hillary, has created a song that is sure to surpass Taylor Swift on the Billboard Top 100.

Just watch:

[VIDEO]

The song, which went online in November, was written by Miguel Orozco, a media producer who was also behind this much catchier Reggaeton tune about Barack Obama in 2008. (The chorus of that one: "¿Cómo se dice? ¿Cómo se llama? Obama, Obama!")

We at National Journal take such super-PAC media campaigns very seriously. And thus, we decided to provide you, dear reader, with a fully annotated version of the "Stand With Hillary" lyrics.

VERSE 1:

Lookin' back in time, learnin' hindsight's always right

We came together in a way [also sounds like he's saying "in no way"]

A defining moment we all can celebrate [with hamburgers and French fries!]

And now it's 2016 [not really, no] and this time I'm a thinkin'

Guys put your boots on, and let's smash this ceiling! [smashes what appears to be a car window with '2016' spray painted on it]

CHORUS:

I've been thinkin' about one great lady like the women in my life ["Women" ≠ "one great lady"]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

She's a mother, a daughter, and through it all, she's a lovin' wife [Are these really the first credentials you want to cite for supporting someone running for president?]

Oh, there is something about her, this great lady, caring, hard-working, once a First Lady [expertly rhymes "lady" with "lady"]

She fights for country and my family, now it's time for us to stand up

BOOM BOOM CLAP

BOOM BOOM CLAP [very "We Will Rock You"!]

With Hillary

Hillary!

Stand up

With Hillary

VERSE 2:

Don't matter if you're livin' across this great land in a red or blue state

'Cuz our American Dream is at stake

And there's some Hard Choices that need to be made [Your royalty check from Simon & Schuster is in the mail.]

We're needing a leader who is tough and ready [Unnecessary use of the present continuous tense]

Who's got vision

For me it's Hillary

And that's my final decision!

CHORUS:

I've been thinkin' about one great lady like the women in my life

She's a mother, a daughter, and through it all, she's a lovin' wife

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Oh, there is something about her, this great lady, caring, hard-working, once a First Lady

She fights for country and my family

Now it's time for us to stand up

BOOM BOOM CLAP

BOOM BOOM CLAP

With Hillary

Hillary!

Stand up, America

With Hillary.

Surely, "Stand With Hillary" will go down in the pantheon of such amateur campaign songs as "Cocoa Tea's Barack Obama Reggae Song," "Ron Paul Revolution" and "Hillary 4U&Me". GRAMMY Awards voting members, call your office!

Washington Examiner column: Michael Barone: "Clinton's stock declining in futures market"

By Michael Barone

December 4, 2014, 5:00 a.m. EST

Is the market in Hillary Clinton futures collapsing? Quite possibly so.

A year ago Clinton seemed likely to become the next president. Presumably she and her husband had not yet started to call themselves, Bush style, 42 and 45. But she had an overwhelming lead in the polls for the Democratic nomination and was getting 50 percent or more in most polls against possible Republican candidates in general election pairings.

Ratings of Clinton's performance as secretary of state were positive. She seemed poised to hold and add onto Barack Obama's 2008 and 2012 majorities.

Things look different now. Obama now gets negative marks on foreign policy, and some of the luster is off Clinton's record as well. With the Islamic State ravaging much of Iraq and Syria, the decision to withdraw all U.S. troops from Iraq looks dubious. With Vladimir Putin's Russia rampaging through much of Ukraine, Clinton's reset button looks ludicrous.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Most Americans may have been content with a foreign policy of “leading from behind.” But as the world spins out of control, they don’t like the results.

And over the course of 2014 Clinton’s favorability ratings have declined. Her memoir of her Cabinet service had a curiously defensive title — Hard Choices — and her book tour was something like the opposite of a ringing success. Sales were slim and readership probably even slimmer. The prospect of a Clinton presidency may thrill a few aging feminists, but few others seem to find her very interesting.

There’s plenty of bad news for Clinton in last month’s Quinnipiac poll, the first national survey conducted since the November election. Clinton runs 1 point behind Mitt Romney, 1 point ahead of Chris Christie, 4 points ahead of Paul Ryan and 5 points ahead of Jeb Bush, Rand Paul and Mike Huckabee. None of this can be blamed on low off-year turnout; the poll is of registered voters.

All these Republicans except Romney are significantly less well known than Clinton. When asked whether their feelings are favorable or unfavorable, only 5 percent of poll respondents have no opinion on Clinton and 14 percent on Romney; the numbers for the other Republicans run between 29 and 39 percent. So she’s running even with the best-known candidate while the others all have room to grow.

Even more significant are Clinton’s percentages against these candidates: 44, 45, 46, 46, 46 and 46. In seriously contested 2014 Senate races, Democratic incumbents tended to run about even with their poll numbers, while their Republican challengers ran well ahead of theirs. If you apply the same rule to Clinton’s Quinnipiac numbers, she ends up with about the same percentage as John McCain in 2008 or Democratic House candidates in 2010 and 2014.

Now, things may be different by 2016. Obama’s job approval could rise, and Democrats generally could regain the advantage over Republicans they enjoyed a year ago. Increased economic growth could strengthen the incumbent party — although, as RealClearPolitics.com analyst Sean Trende points out, even significantly greater growth would not point to a Democratic victory under most political scientists’ election prediction formulas.

But it’s hard to avoid the conclusion of FiveThirtyEight.com analyst Harry Enten. Clinton, he wrote last Monday, “no longer looks like such a juggernaut. Not only are her numbers dropping, but she is running on par with a Democratic brand in its weakest shape in a decade.”

That’s not what optimistic Democrats were expecting earlier this year. They thought nostalgia for Bill Clinton’s presidency would enable Hillary Clinton to run ahead of party lines. Voters not eager for a third Obama term might welcome a third Clinton term.

But those are appeals that look to the past. Voters expect presidential candidates to look to the future. Hillary Clinton has wide leads in polls for the Democratic nomination. But her record is a bad fit for the Democratic primary electorate in which the energy currently comes from the left. Lurching to the left and then tacking toward the center doesn’t project a clear vision of the future.

In 1991, candidate Bill Clinton gave three policy speeches to overflow crowds at Georgetown University’s Gaston Hall. When Hillary Clinton spoke there last week, the balcony was almost empty and there were empty seats in the lower level, too.

Clinton futures were on the rise 23 years ago. They seem to be in decline 23 years later.

Real Clear Politics: “Jeb Bush Putting Out Feelers in New Hampshire”

By Scott Conroy

December 4, 2014

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

Two top New Hampshire Republican strategists have been contacted this week by a Jeb Bush confidant to discuss their interest in leading the former Florida governor's prospective presidential campaign there, RealClearPolitics has learned from GOP sources in the Granite State.

The new outreach from Bush's camp was directed at a pair of experienced and well-respected New Hampshire GOP operatives, each of whom has previously helmed presidential campaigns in the state.

Both were given the proverbial instruction to "keep your powder dry," suggesting that Bush is leaning toward entering the race early next year.

"I think the decision's been made, personally," said one of the strategists who was contacted by Bush's camp and who spoke to RCP under the condition of anonymity.

Neither of the operatives has been contacted by Bush himself, but they were asked if they'd be interested in speaking with the would-be candidate.

The calls represent the typical form of indirect outreach that likely candidates extend to prospective top staffers before finalizing their decisions to make a White House run.

"I've definitely perceived an uptick in the perception of him doing this," one of the consultants said of the conversation this week with the Bush confidant.

On Monday, the former two-term governor made headlines when he said that the next Republican presidential nominee should be willing to "lose the primary to win the general."

The comment was widely taken to mean that Bush would not back away from his staunch advocacy of comprehensive immigration reform and the Common Core educational standards -- two positions at odds with a majority of the Republican base -- in order to secure the GOP nomination.

If Bush does enter the race, New Hampshire -- with its wide swatch of moderate Republicans and independents who vote in the presidential primary -- figures to be the early voting state most critical to his chances.

This new outreach to top strategists there signals that New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie -- for whom New Hampshire will be an equally important piece on his electoral chess board -- may not be able to wait much longer before soliciting top Granite State talent for his own expected campaign.

Both New Hampshire operatives expressed interest in speaking with Bush.

"Of the Bushes, he's the guy I like the best," said one of the strategists. "If I were betting money on it, I'd bet he'd be the nominee because you'll have eight to 10 conservatives beating each other up, and someone will take the middle, and it'll be either him or Christie."

Yahoo: "Obama's attorney general pick wants to throw the book at convicted Hillary Clinton bundler"

By Michael Isikoff

December 3, 2014

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

[Subtitle:] As she faces confirmation battle, U.S. Attorney Loretta Lynch's hard line could help with Republicans

The U.S. attorney nominated by President Barack Obama to be his next attorney general is asking a federal judge to impose a stiff prison term of up to four and a half years on a former Hillary Clinton fundraiser convicted of making more than $180,000 in illegal campaign contributions.

The request by Loretta Lynch, the U.S. attorney in Brooklyn, to reject leniency for wealthy hotelier Sant Singh Chatwal and have him sent to federal prison is the latest example of the tough stance Justice Department prosecutors are taking with those convicted of making so-called conduit contributions — campaign cash that is falsely reported as being made in the name of others.

But the court filing by Lynch's office this week also comes at a time when she is facing a potentially tough grilling from Republican lawmakers on her nomination to succeed Attorney General Eric Holder. "It won't hurt for Loretta Lynch to be sending a major Democratic fundraiser to prison right before her confirmation hearing for attorney general," said Brett Kappel, a Washington campaign-finance lawyer who closely tracks federal election law enforcement.

Chatwal, 70, is an immigrant from India who is chairman of the $1.5 billion Hampshire Hotels & Resorts empire, which owns luxury hotels around the world. He has long been close to both Bill and Hillary Clinton; he raised more than $100,000 for Hillary Clinton's 2008 campaign and, according to his lawyer's own filings in his case, was a founder of the Clinton Global Initiative, a charitable arm of the former first couple's foundation. He once accompanied Bill Clinton on a trip to India.

In April, Chatwal pleaded guilty to violating federal election law by illegally raising funds for Hillary Clinton and two other federal candidates through the use of straw donors. He also pleaded guilty to witness tampering after he was caught on tape coaching one of those donors, who turned out to be a government informant, to lie to investigators.

Chatwal's case has gotten some attention because of his blunt words — caught on tape by the wired informant — about the role of big money in politics, and why fundraisers such as himself give so much cash in the first place. "Without [money] nobody will ever talk to you," Chatwal told the informant, according to court filings. "That's the only way to buy them, get into the system."

In a recent court filing, Chatwal's lawyer, Jonathan Sack, said his client "comes before this court humbled — filled with remorse and shame for what he has done." But Sack asked that the court show leniency for Chatwal and not send him to prison, citing a long history of humanitarian causes, including his work with Bill Clinton and relief efforts in India.

But Lynch's prosecutors took a hard line, saying he should receive an enhanced prison sentence of between 46 and 57 months because of his efforts to obstruct justice. "The evidence in this case reveals a man who believes that either the rules do not apply to him or that they can be subverted in pursuit of his own ends," Lynch wrote in a court filing cosigned by Jack Smith, chief of the Justice Department's Public Integrity Section.

There is no evidence in the case that Hillary Clinton or any of her campaign team were aware of Chatwal's illegal contributions. But he is the latest in a series of fundraisers from her 2008 campaign — seven all told — who have been prosecuted for illegal campaign contributions, a record that has been attributed by campaign finance experts to the then senator's heavy reliance on wealthy "bundlers" to raise cash for her run against Barack Obama.

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To:	jpodesta@who.eop.gov
Date:	8/14/2014 2:01:40 AM
Subject:	Fwd: Memorandum on Nuclear Power outlook
Attachments:	JMD-RKL Nuclear Memo (rev)[1].pdf

---------- Forwarded message ----------
From: "John M Deutch" <jmd@mit.edu >
Date: Aug 13, 2014 7:16 PM
Subject: Memorandum on Nuclear Power outlook
To: "John Podesta" <John_D_Podesta@who.eop.gov >, "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com >
Cc:

John,

I attach a four page memo that my colleague and friend Richard Lester have prepared about the outlook for nuclear power in the U.S.

I did this because of your telling me that you were concerned about this question and would welcome some outside view.

We shall be interested in your reaction. And if you request it, we will prepare a more complete paper.

Still at the cape. We expect 19 guests in the next 21 days. Mostly Phil and Marne collecting nice people. Nevertheless Pat and I may go to a motel.

I am set up to meet with Caroline Atkinson who, by all accounts, is quite excellent.

John

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Haim Saban" <kussa@saban.com>
To:	john.podesta@gmail.com "Huma Abedin" <huma@hrcoffice.com> "Robby \(HRC\) Mook \(re47@hillaryclinton.com\)" <re47@hillaryclinton.com>
Date:	2/29/2016 1:18:35 PM
Subject:	Florida Florida Florida

I know you know,,,,,but still wanted to share.

"Rubio strikes Trump on Israel, seeking crucial Florida win" by Michael Wilner: "While the state's Jewish voters number up to 500,000– for perspective, Barack Obama won the state in 2012 by just 74,000 votes– roughly two thirds of that electorate reliably votes Democratic.. Nevertheless, Rubio's aggressive stance on Israel is defining his foreign policy early on in his candidacy… A Quinnipiac poll from August showed that 61 percent of Floridians oppose the nuclear deal reached with Iran last summer– a position reflected by Rubio." [JPost]

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
To: "Milia Fisher" <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com>
Date: 5/1/2015 4:11:36 AM
Subject: Re: TWEETS 5/1

Ok

On May 1, 2015 7:25 AM, "Milia Fisher" <mfisher@hillaryclinton.com > wrote:

Note: my new goal is to send a second round of Tweets in the PM to respond to campaign developments throughout the day.

TWEETS 5/1

New study: ice-loss in Antarctica increased 6 bil tons/year each year from 2003 to 2014. Cap melting faster than ever. tp://bit.ly/1JegM3y (140)

If you can't keep track of Schweizer's fabrications, distortions in "Clinton Cash" @MediaMatters can help: http://bit.ly/1GCbj3A (137)

RETWEETS 5/1

Suggestion from KLC:

--
Milia Fisher
Special Assistant to the Chair
Hillary for America
mfisher@hillaryclinton.com
o: 646.854.1198 c: 858.395.1741

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From:	"Major General \(Ret.\) Paul Eaton, VoteVets.org" <info@votevets.org>
To:	"John Podesta" <john.podesta@gmail.com>
Date:	8/6/2015 9:21:42 AM
Subject:	Two choices: Diplomacy or War

VoteVets.org
Country. Service. Action.

"And if the rhetoric in these ads, and the accompanying commentary, sounds familiar, it should -- for many of the same people who argued for the war in Iraq are now making the case against the Iran nuclear deal." - President Obama, August 5, 2015

John -

Yesterday afternoon, the President laid out the case for why Congress should approve the deal negotiated between the United States, our partners in the P5+1, and Iran.

The choice is clear: Congress must approve the deal.

Not only is a deal the best way to prevent Iran from obtaining a nuclear weapon, but if the agreement falls apart, Iran will get everything they want: sanctions will begin to unravel, America will lose some of its standing in the world, and Iran's path to the bomb will only accelerate. In short, it's almost everything the hardliners in Iran are hoping for.

As Congress heads home for recess before the September vote, they need to hear from veterans, military family members and VoteVets supporters on this issue.

Tell your representative and senators that you expect them to vote to APPROVE the deal negotiated with Iran that will prevent them from obtaining a nuclear weapon.

There are ultimately two choices here: diplomacy or war.

For some neoconservatives, they are happy to cast their lot with more war. For them, force is the only tool in America's foreign policy arsenal. But we'll be there to counter their worldview every step of the way in this debate.

We have a very unique voice in the conversation.

Make yours heard.

Major General (Ret.) Paul Eaton
VoteVets

Contribute

PAID FOR BY VOTEVETS ACTION FUND

This email was sent to john.podesta@gmail.com. If that is not your preferred email address, click here . Click here if you'd like to unsubscribe. We try to send only the most important information and opportunities to participate via email. To sustain VoteVets with a contribution click here .

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

From: "Belfer Center for Science and International Affairs" <info@belfercenter.hks.harvard.edu>
To: podesta@law.georgetown.edu
Date: 11/18/2015 9:53:13 AM
Subject: Reflecting on Paris Attacks

This message contains graphics. If you do not see the graphics, click here to view .

HARVARD Kennedy School
BELFER CENTER for Science and International Affairs

Reflecting on Paris Attacks

In the wake of Friday's terrorist attacks in Paris, what's the best way to confront ISIS? Can Europe rise to the challenge? What does it mean for U.S. policy toward Syrian refugees? What should Washington do — and not do — now?

Belfer Center experts are weighing in on these and related questions. For insightful analysis from a diverse range of viewpoints, we offer a selection of our recent op-eds, interviews, and original commentary.

Nov. 14, 2015 – A memorial for the victims killed in Friday's Paris attacks in front of the French Embassy in Berlin. (AP Photo/Markus Schreiber)

Selected Statements

"Air strikes, without some ground forces, will compound the problem, as ISIS learns that the West is unwilling to defend its liberties, no matter how heinous the provocation. Immediate efforts must focus on ISIS, but Assad has murdered 250,000 people and Iran has not abandoned its nuclear ambitions. They remain the primary threats."
—Charles Freilich, Senior Fellow, Belfer Center

"After the Paris attacks, President Obama must demonstrate that his strategy for defeating Daesh without committing U.S. ground troops can succeed. The immediate test is a planned attack by Kurdish and Syrian Arab forces, backed by U.S. and allied air power, on Raqqa, capital of the Islamic State Caliphate. If the attack succeeds, it will validate the Administration's strategy, but if it fails, calls for a new approach requiring U.S. ground forces will become more intense."
—Gary Samore, Executive Director for Research, Belfer Center

"Europe must not fall into ISIS's trap. ISIS wants to stop Syrians from fleeing its realm. It wants to stoke anti-Muslim backlash to provoke more European Muslims to radicalize. The Paris attacker's Syrian refugee passport may be real or fake. Regardless, failing to handle the matter with caution is perilous for both refugees and European security."
—Jill Goldenziel, Research Fellow, Belfer Center

This version of Total Mail Converter is not registered.

"Let us be clear about what is happening. Like the Roman Empire in the early fifth century, Europe has allowed its defenses to crumble. As its wealth has grown, so its military prowess has shrunk, along with its self-belief. It has grown decadent in its shopping malls and sports stadiums. At the same time, it has opened its gates to outsiders who have coveted its wealth without renouncing their ancestral faith."
—Niall Ferguson, Board of Directors, Belfer Center

"ISIS hopes to ignite a vast religious war, to vindicate its narrative of Western hostility and win it more support. Sending U.S. forces back into the Middle East maelstrom would give ISIS exactly what it wants. Military force alone cannot solve this problem, and could easily make it worse."
—Stephen Walt, Robert and Renée Belfer Professor of International Affairs, Belfer Center

Commentary & Analysis

- Ayaan Hirsi Ali: "Europe's Terrorist War at Home"
- Farah Pandith: "Countering Extremism After the Paris Attacks"
- Juliette Kayyem: "Lesson One: Terror Is Not About Lone Wolves"
- Kelly Greenhill: "Europe Must Deal With the Breeding of Terrorism Within Its Borders"
- Michael Morell: "ISIS Will Strike America"
- Niall Ferguson: "Paris and the Fall of Rome"
- Nicholas Burns: "The Attacks In Paris and Options To Combat Terrorism"
- Stephen Walt: "Don't Give ISIS What It Wants"

More Insights

79 JFK Street, Cambridge, MA 02138
belfer_center@hks.harvard.edu | 617-495-1400
Belfer Center | Harvard Kennedy School | Harvard University
Privacy Policy | Subscription Preferences | Unsubscribe
Connect With Us: